Thanks, Ace.

Oh, btw...as long as you're here. Yesterday, we had a huge power failure here at the ranch. Tree took out a trunk on the next block. Lots of darkness.

I took advantage of the quiet, and hooked up the R8A to batteries, and sat for a quiet listen in the dark.

I've had similar experiences with my Ten-Tec, and I've taken the HF-150, the Sat 650, and Sat 700 to the woods. But this was different. And a very enjoyable experience. Some great listening, and the DRAKE was very easy to handle in the dark. Near intuitive, but easily adapted to in cases where it isn't.

The lower output of the MTA antenna was more than offset by the sensitivity of the receiver and the dramatically low noise floor of the MTA.

Now, I bought this thing largely due to your ongoing endorsement of Drake receivers. As well as some things I'd read, comments I'd heard. And my experience with SW-2 and SW-8.

But largely because of your comments.

Credit where due.

Thanks.

As far as I can tell Nancy Pelosi's Nazis are the Republicans.
While they are willing to confuse Nazis and Facist with Socialists and Communists the tactics being used mirror those of these groups.
The current trick of disrupting town meetings would fit well with Mao's Red Guard. Heck they even share in the criticism of the Univiersity's "Cultural Elite".

Lightweight? You haven't provided a single shred of evidence to give support to your claims. You fall into the kooktard category.

Apparently the greatest number of these kooktards hail from the South.
With guys like Shelby and certain radio hosts making the comments that they do it's no wonder that these kooktards keep cropping up.

Yep - it would have been game over for the BHO campaign if McCain's lawyers had found a little bit of evidence to support the claims.

What makes you think that BHO has sealed his records?

From FactCheck: ï¿½The Hawaii Department of Healthï¿½s birth record request form does not give the option to request a photocopy of your long-form birth certificate, but their short form has enough information to be acceptable to the State Department.ï¿½

Is the POTUS allowed to overturn state law summarily?

Hi Larby,

How are you going….I hope you are in fine spirits and even better health. I am sorry I have not been in touch with you for so long, it's just that I have been fairly busy with work and one thing and another. How are things for you over there across the ditch? I was over there myself in June of this year, although I only got to the South Island as I had just 5 days to spare from work. Had a simply wonderful time driving from Christchurch in my little Mazda hire car, up to Hanmer Springs, across to Kaikoura and then down to Akaroa. The weather, although very cold, was lovely, as was the hospitality received from everyone I encountered. I must say, the South Island is most definitely in my top 5 destinations and I am eagerly awaiting the next opportunity to go back!

Well, please drop me a line when you get the time, as I am interested to hear what you have been up to.

Best Wishes to you and your loved ones, Brian and Family.

- Apparently the greatest number of these kooktards hail from the South.
- With guys like Shelby and certain radio hosts making the comments that
- they do it's no wonder that these kooktards keep cropping up.

Cana-D'Oh!-ians commenting on American Politics now that is instant KookTardery.

- No, it isn't. And it's possible they DID lie.

FactCheck.Org a Liberal {Democrat} front ORG that many claim is funded by George {NWO} Soros
-aka- the Man in the 'shadows' behind Prez Obama

Who Is Prez Obama's Puppet Master ?
Some Claim It Is George Soros !
http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/George_Soros More importantly that Rahm Emanuel is George Soros' -in-side-man- in the Obama
White House and is the 'in-between'.

Thanks so much for the link dxAce. I put on a pot of coffee and had a good read through it. As you probably know, I am still trying to come to grips with the many operating features of my new Grundig G6 (I purchased the special Buzz Aldrin LIMITED edition unit) so I am really not able to take advantage at this stage of the many frequencies provided on the particular 'Topnews' website. Was just wondering dxAce, would you know of any particular hard copy magazines which would be beneficial for a beginner 'wavie' such as myself? I am trying to read as much material as possible, as I figure that is one of the best ways to get myself up to speed. I am also trying to spend as much time with my unit as possible to really get a handle on it.

Kind regards and thank you so much in advance for your advice/ guidance, BK G6 (Another happy Aviator 'Buzz Aldrin' special edition owner)

- What makes you think that BHO has sealed his records?
- From FactCheck: “The Hawaii Department of Health’s birth record request
- form does not give the option to request a photocopy of your long-form
- birth certificate, but their short form has enough information to be
- acceptable to the State Department.”
- Is the POTUS allowed to overturn state law summarily?

Hi Burr,

I am really sorry that I am only just replying to your email now. I have been real busy since the end of last week after having made my very first purchase of a shortwave unit (end up going with the Grundig G6 Aviator - Buzz Aldrin special edition), In regard to your question, I am currently living in Australia, but I spent my teenage years and the majority of my adulthood in the States. How long have you been interested in shortwaves Burr? It would be really neat to hear your story and a bit more about your life in the Philippines too :)

Kind regards Burr and I look forward to corresponding with you again soon, BK G6

Greetings Khun Brian,
So nice to catch up again. What a pity you did'nt make it to Tauranga and enjoy our beautiful weather here.
The weather has been cold he Khun Brian that is true but I'm sure that the welcome you would have received in Tauranga by His Honour the Mayor and myself would have more than warmed the cockles of your heart.
You did however visit a most beautiful part of New Zealand and I admit that I have several business interests in that part of the world.
I see that you have taken up shortwave radio's, does this mean that we can communicate with each other on the airwaves or are you just listening in on police broadcasts and the like?
Would you mind putting up some photos of your wedding to the lovely Ning, we have been dying to see them.
I am informed by Steve that is was a memorable day and he had taken some spectacular shots, like the professional he is.

btw He seems to be thriving since his move to Singapore.

Cheers for now.

Larby

Hello Friends,

In connection with the Indian Independence day on August 15, The President of India, Mrs. Pratibha Devisingh Patil will be broadcsting to the nation at 1330 UTC (7,00 PM IST) on 14 August 2009. All stations of AIR will relay it on MW SW & FM. The AIR regional SW stations will be on 4 MHz band then.

For detailed AIR SW sked visit : http://www.qsl.net/vu2jos/sw/freq.htm

Look out for the rare AIR station in Kohima on 4850 on 14 & 15 August, 2009 as follows:

14 Aug 2009 1000-1600 UTC approx
15 Aug 2009 0000-0415 UTC approx

AIR Kohima is heard now a days only on such special occasions like Independence Day August 15 & Republic Day January 26 and has been heard even by listeners in USA.

To view QSL received from their New Delhi office please click:

http://www.qsl.net/vu2jos/qsls/Kohima.jpg

(via Jose Jacob, VU2JOS, dx_india)

Propagation will probably not be favourable here, but those in other locales may have some luck with Kohima.

Heard here back in January on Republic Day, and I've just recently sent off a follow-up report for both Kohima and Guwahati (4940)

The idea was to fight ideas with ideas. If you know who is spreding bad ideas you know who you need to convince. The irrational fears suggested by the right wing spin machine are there to make sure this isn't a rational debate.

Unlike under Bush, the protestors aren't being arrested for peaceful protest. Crimes are still crimes, even under a "liberal" president. The ends never justify the means. It cannot be the case that the same acts are moral or immoral depending upon one's cause.

That's a great idea and I have a feeling there's going to be an opening for a white female on that show soon. I have a feeling Kim is not gonna last much longer. She might not get asked back for the third season. Who knows? De Shawn got the boot, which shows they're not above kicking someone they don't like to the curb. And if it's drama they want, with Loafie they'll get it in spades! Can you imagine her getting into a catfight with NeNe, rolling on the floor pulling each other's wigs off? And then the reunion show with Andy Cohen. They always get into big fights on the reunion show. The (fake) fur's gonna fly!

Has anyone tried to increase the number of memories in the RP2100 as could be done in some older radios... like by adding a rotary switch and combining the wires to the memories? I did this for example on an old Yaesu radio, and was wondering if it might also be do-able on an RP2100.
The process on the older radio was to combine the 12 wires to the standard 12 memory units with a 6-position rotary switch so that I had 72 memories instead of just 12. Some used a 12-position switch and got 144 stored frequencies for recall.
Part of the issue would be locating the wires inside the cabinet in order to know what to hook to the added switch.

Crechale's Restaurant on Highway 80, about two miles East behind doggy's couch, is over fifty years old, the restaurant is famous for the best steaks and seafood in the World.It is an old restaurant and doesn't look like much on the outside, but the food is Great.They still have that old neon Crechale's sign too.

I have four (48'' by 79'') Ondura www.ondura.com corrugated roofin panels sittin in my new old 1983 Dodge van.Yesterday, I put one of those panels on top of the trailer shed I am buildig around my 1914 Ford Model T car, the car is sittin on my trailer.I can cut about thirty inches off of each one of those panels and use the shorter cut off pieces for the rear of my trailer shed roof, I think.The Lowe's store also sells Ondura roofin nails, the nails have EPDM (whatever EPDM means?) Butyl washers on them.I am not going to nail those panels down, I am going to screw them down.I will buy some flat washers to put on the three inch long galvanized screws I will use and a tube of exterior grade Silicone seal stuff.I am going to do it MY way.

I am waitin on the snail mail van to come rolling down the street, because sometimes that letter carrier dude doesn't properly close my snail mail box door and I don't want anybody walkin up and down the street to ''inspect'' my snail mail.My snail mail PC World magazine or my snail mail Popular Mechanics magazine might show up today.

Then I am goin to the Lowe's store for Silicone seal, I might as well buy a new caulking gun too, it would take me a year to find my old one.

The other Best restaurant in Jackson is the Cherokee Inn restaurant wayyyyyyyy up North on North State Street.I guess it is still there.I heard somewhere they done remodeled that old restaurant.

Lets me plop my battery into my old van (I don't leave my battery in my van because I don't believe in spreading my wealth, I bought that battery last September when I bought my new old 1983 Dodge RV van.I am the second owner of that van.The old guy I bought it from sure did take real good care of that van) and git on over to the Lowe's store now.I hopes the Lowe's store done put out some more flat washers of the size I need.I needs about 35 for each one of the Ondura roofin panels I am going to screw down onto the roof rafters of my trailer shed.

JT and Dave www.supertalkms.com just now said the new Chevrolet Volt car should get 230 miles per gallon, in city traffic, it will cost about $40,000 though.That's according to Government Motors.(General Motors) JT and Dave also said the only reason the new Toyota Prius plant in Blue Springs (near Tupelo) is not open now is because of a shortage of batteries and they are made in Japan.

Drive south on Hwy. 49 you dumb shit. Those Russian Vehicles are still there, overgrown with weeds, the fences are mostly down and nobody's there.

Look out for the black helicopters though.....LOL!!!!!!!!!!

Clean up your rat infested hovel you friggin' retard!

Any moron can build a radio station; I build TV stations. I need no plans because after the first couple dozen you tend to remember everything.

As far as reefer goes, it is quite widely used by very responsible and important people.

Prez Obama Slams Obama-Care© 'Scare' Tactics
http://health.yahoo.com/news/afp/uspoliticsobamahealth_20090811222841.html

* Prez Obama appeared be fore a 'select' group of Americans in a campaign-style Town Hall Meeting in New Hampshire make up of Democrat Party Cadre, ACORN Activists and SEIU Union Reps.

* Prez Obama side-step the two issues : That the Obama-Care© Program is too Expensive; and that Obama-Care© is in-fact a US Federal Government Seizure of the private health system.
-claiming- It Ain't So {Oh Yah Sure}

* Prez Obama -claimed- Obama-Care© Program Will Not Raise Taxes to Pay for a the Plan {Oh Yah Sure}

* Prez Obama -claimed- Obama-Care© Program will not have so-called "Death Panels" of Government
'Appointees' to Make End-of-Life Choices for the Sick, Injured and Elderly. {Oh Yah Sure}

* Prez Obama -claimed- "I Want to Clear the Air here."
So why did BHO only meet with a 'select' group of Americans make up of Democrat Party Cadre,
ACORN Activists and SEIU Union Reps ? ? ?
IMHO - The Prez of America should Face-Up to All the American People not just a 'select' few 'chosen' supporters.

* Prez Obama -what-BHO-did-not-tell-you- Yeah you get to keep your Private Health Care for now . . .
But you also get to Pay for the Obama-Care© Program for all the others and over time this will double your cost of Health Care in Out-of-Pocket Payments and Taxes to pay for others Health Care.

This is not a good year for visual observation of the Perseids. The last quarter moon is in the general area of the sky where the meteors appear to originate. The moonlight washes out the sky, so only the brighter meteors are visible. However you can monitor the Perseids or other meteor showers on an FM radio receiver.
Tune the receiver to a blank channel, preferably in the lower end of the band. When a meteor passes over your area the ionized trail can reflect the signal from a distant station located beyond the horizon. The station may be audible for a few seconds or possibly longer. If the timing is right you may hear a station ID. Sometimes you won't hear any station but there might be a short whooshing sound followed by an increase in the background noise which then fades away. The best time to listen to the Perseids is in the period starting around local midnight and extending through the morning hours. This will depend on the listeners latitude. The farther north you are, the longer you can hear the Perseids after sunrise. The best listening equipment is a sensitive table top FM receiver connected to an external antenna mounted outside, well above ground. A directional antenna is not required and may even reduce the strength of some signals. I once heard a station that was about a thousand miles away. This happens when the meteor is low on the horizon halfway between the listener and the station location. Meteors typically begin to ionize the atmosphere at an altitude of about fifty miles so their maximum reflecting range is around 700 miles in any direction or 1400 miles total. The Perseids continue for at least a week after the maximum tonight, so don't give up too soon.

Ondura installation paper thingy says to use a circular saw with a carbide tooth blade if you wants to cut off some of the lenght.(the stuff is made of apshalt (now, just watch somebody pipe up and told me how to spell that!) with some kind of fibers in it)

I tried that with my old Skilsaw (SKIL, Trademark Registered, TM) with a carbide blade I put on my saw a year ago.

I tell y'all what, don't do it! Instead, use an old jagged edge (factory made jagged edge/sawtooth edge/whatever you wants to call it) kitchen knife, it works like a Charm! Make a couple of marks with a pencil, lay another piece of Ondura on the other Ondura and draw your pencil line where you wants to cut, along the corrugated ridges and also down in the valleys.Git your jagged edge kitchen knife and start cutting.

Be sure to clean off the knife real good so your wife or galfriends wont know what you used it for.

4804. WILL OBAMA GO TO OKLAHOMA? - It's starting to feel like 1995 all over again.

Public anger against the Democrats and the Clintons was rising to the boiling point - and suddenly was snuffed out when the Oklahoma Federal Building was bombed by a "right-wing terrorist." Remember?

"It's only a matter of time" before that happens again, federal officials are now warning in major media stories.

Yes, it is only a matter of time - until Zero and his Chicago thugs perpetrate some heinous terrorist act for which they and the media can blame "anti-government un-American right-wing hate groups ."

Don't think that Nancy Pelosi's accusation of "un-American mobs" of "angry right-wing" protestors at town halls "waving swastikas" was an emotional outburst. It was setting the stage. Folks, we are being set up. Just like in 1995.

That inside job fed building in Oklahoma City, sometimes some of the entry/exit main doors weren't even locked.One time, two women who worked in that building, they saw two suspicious looking guys talking in a foreign language, when those two guys saw those two women, they shut up.Don't blame it all on Timothy McVeigh! Good post Scatter and very informative. I'm going to spend some time out there tonight. I'm not really curious as to the sounds on the FM Band because I have already heard it, years ago.

Hopefully I can see something tonight, if not, at least it was some good time in my backyard with the GE P-780, tonight I'm going to hook onto my 1,200 ft. of wire just to hear what that old GE radio might be able to hear.

Yup. Almost all violent terrorism in recent years the US is committed by far right extremists, from McVeigh to bin Laden.

As for your lunatic "tinfoil hat" rants, seek professional mental intervention before it's too late. In all seriousness.

Hint: a tinfoil hat will NOT protect you from your own far-gone

I wonder how this compares with the Traveller II G8, with a single-

The Grundig G8 (which is a private label version of the Tecsun PL-310wt) is a very poor performer on SW (at least using the whip alone) because it is flooded with noise and images from MW signals. If you attach an antenna it is much better, but tuning around SW without direct frequency entry can get tedious. Where the G8 shines is on MW and especially on FM.

Earlier than that with Electornics Illustrated shortwave club call letters. I used to have one of those. Who was the guy who penned the SWL column and gave out the call-signs, Tom _____? I know it wasn't "Uncle" Tom McCahill!

I was born in OK and spent the first 27 years of my life there, family still lives there, and I DON'T WANT TO GO TO OKLAHOMA! I don't blame Obama for not wanting to go there! I left faster than the Okies during

Hi,

Is this correct for aero "stuff":

For

ARINC LDOC (6640, 11342, 21964,...)
ARINC Regional Nets (93016, 17946,...)
HFGCS (8992, 11175,...)

All USB ?

If so, is all aero. HF <30 MHz always SSB ?

Thanks.

Except for hams, almost everything is USB. Hams are not because there were no standards when they started. Many of them used the same US military surplus radio as an exciter which needed to be mixed with another signal to produce one that fell in a ham band. The result was when mixed below 10mHz, the result was the lower sideband, when mixed above it was the upper.

So that became the standard used by hams, but there is no legal requirement to use any particual sideband.

The exception to that rule is the 5mHz ham band which is limited to a small number of fixed frequencies in USB. (US only).

You are right: they call it Socialist National Health Care to frighten the uninformed into supporting big-money private insurance companies in their decades-old rip off of the American people. They label it socialism because they know that most people have little knowledge of what socialism is, only that it's bad. So associating a national healthcare program that employs private healthcare suppliers with the dreaded socialism tricks the average working stiffs into opposing such a program, even though they need it badly. It's a classic false propaganda ploy: deceit by association.

Of course, the proposed public plan bears no resemblance to socialism; it is merely a system of safely pooling the money to be used for healthcare. The government will not be the owner of the clinics, the hospitals, or the equipment. The doctors, technicians, and nurses will not be working for the government. Healthcare will be administered by private individuals just as always. The only difference will be the party holding the pooled money and distributing the funds as needed will be public officials and not insurance company executives.

And there is the problem. The money shufflers in big business, the insurance companies, want to continue having control over the billions of dollars being set aside for healthcare. They skim off enormous profits, not only in fees and expenses, but also in using that money while its not needed for actual healthcare services. They can invest that money, even gamble it all away if they get the urge, as that monstrous insurance company AIG did recently. They can use the money for lavish jaunts, generous salaries and bonuses, catered parties and dinners, and any number of "business-related" adventures.

If the government takes the money under its wing until it's needed, the insurance companies will have to look for other sources; those well-paid executives might even be forced to go to work somewhere. So they are willing to slip some of the money to anyone, any party who can disrupt and destroy any chance of a public plan where the money will be put under the government's care rather than left to the lust of the private executives and money managers.

The advice is often given that with a world radio, the listener should go near to a window or into a balcony.

It is even better to go outside of the building (with batteries of course). Go to a garden, onto a lawn, to a park.

You will be really amazed at how good the reception is!!

Who, Me?
I was called a "pedifile" by a 14 year old on My Space.

He was from the town I grew up in...

He had himself listed as 19...

There were 3 guys in the photo, from a distance, looking like it was graduation.

How was I to know it was 8th grade......

meow

by the way...

Which one were you?

Obama did not vote for the fake war.

Mr. Bush has trillions in spending off the books. He transferred tax cuts for billionaires into liablilities for future wage earners. He deregulated and caused billions in damage to the environment and thousands of premature deaths. He is not a good example of anything good.

The Battery Shack.

Need batteries with that?

I haven't been to a Radio Shack store in years.
Just across Highway 80 from doggy's couch is Metrocenter Mall, there is a Radio Shack store in that mall.About a mile and a half South of doggy's couch is another Radio Shack store in that strip mall next door to the Wal Mart store.(the GNC store is in that strip mall, that's where I buy my Estrogen capsules) There are some more Radio Shack stores in the Jackson area too.Lets me look em up in my phone book,,,,
I counted seven Radio Shack stores listed in my phone book.

Mutually exclusive??? Liberals want a government that provides for all their 'needs' by taxing 'the productive' under the guise or rights and freedom; Fasicts want government control of distribution while maintaing the guise of private property/production. At least Communism is HONEST about it's goals.

Nancy Pelosi is no liberal. Dennis Kucinich is a liberal.

SB PROP ARL ARLP033
ARLP033 Propagation de K7RA

Another quiet week on the Sun. Last week on Earth we neglected to mention the Perseids meteor shower, which peaked this week on August 12-13. A nice statistical display from the International Meteor Organization is at http://www.imo.net/live/perseids2009/.

A look at http://www.swpc.noaa.gov/ftpmenu/forecasts/45DF.html on August 13 showed possible heightened geomagnetic activity returning around August 18-19, with a planetary A index of 20 and 12, respectively.

Geophysical Institute Prague expects quiet conditions August 14, unsettled August 15, quiet August 16-17, unsettled August 18, quiet to unsettled for August 19 and quiet on August 20 The predicted planetary A index from the Space Weather Prediction Center for those same dates is 5, 5, 5, 5, 20, 12 and 8. Check the link in the previous paragraph to see if the forecast changes and is updated.

The autumnal equinox is less than 40 days from now, to occur on September 22 at 2118z. Even if there are no sunspots, we should see a shift and seasonal improvement compared to summer. Comparing the first day of fall to mid-July, 20 meter conditions from New England to the Czech Republic shows an end to openings during the evening on the USA end, and daytime openings shifting to earlier hours. The July 20 meter opening from 1930-0200z shifts to 1330-2200z in September. 17 meters shows very little chance of propagation over the same path in summer, but in fall opens 1330z to 1900z.

A similar shift occurs on the West Coast. From California to Japan, in summer the 20 meter opening is in local nighttime at the W6 end, strongest 0630-1030z. In the fall it happens earlier, 2200-0330z. On 17 meters over the same path, signals are much stronger in the fall, with openings around 2200-0230z.

Jim Spears, N1NK of Tiverton, Rhode Island, wrote to comment on the current sporadic-E season, which he noted should be winding down. Jim says he hasn't seen much sporadic-e activity, and checked six meters most days, but June was very good for him into Europe. Jim wrote, ''With a 5 element Yagi at 40 feet and THP 1.5Kfx amp I improved my distance record to the east by working 4X4DK, DK1MAX, and OE5D as new ones. A number of other new ones in EU (mostly southern) and Caribbean along with 8R1TO and PV8ADI in South America were also worked leaving me with a current total of 73 worked and 67 confirmed, all via Es. I also failed to work any west coast US stations, something that has been a regular occurrence the past few years''.

Jim noted that July was extremely wet and stormy in New England, and doesn't know if this is coincidental, but he saw little six meter propagation to anywhere. ''It seemed that the propagation was completely skipping over or bypassing us. There were very few moments when I would hear any signal on the band at all''.

In an email Jim received from Mick, W1JJ, also in Rhode Island, but with a better antenna system, the 6 meter E season was about average for Mick, who has been active on 6 meters for 50 years. He worked 3 new countries, bringing his 6 meter total to 186. Mick says openings were slow in May, much better in June, but he had only a couple of good openings to Europe. In July he worked 4X4, SV, SV9, SV5, OD, TZ and TA. To the west, he had a couple of good openings to W6 and one to KH6. He sent along an audio file of JA7QVI on six meters, who was quite loud, and the only JA he worked in the past couple of years. Mick worked him at 2258z on July 8. In the Six Meters Marathon he totaled 94 countries from the first week in May through August 3.

Pat Dyer, WA5IYX of San Antonio, Texas wrote about digital television vs. the old analog system and its usefulness as an indicator of VHF propagation. ''Some have had much more luck than myself at decoding DTV via Es, but here are two samples of my best, http://www.qsl.net/wa5iyx/images/wbra-dt-3.1z.jpg (1187 mi) and http://www.qsl.net/wa5iyx/images/whbf-dt-4.1z.jpg (950 mi)''.

''A vivid example of what was available on low-VHF TV for Es from here vs. now on DTV is shown on these maps http://www.qsl.net/wa5iyx/lovesavd.htm. A prime problem in getting DTV Es decoded stems from the system's intolerance for co-channel signals (unless one is dominant by 15 db). Many a time the 54.310 MHz DTV pilots can be heard on my FT-847 as a mixture of signals with a 4-Hz beat rate (note how many US DTV Ch 2 stations are to my NW-N, and can come in simultaneously). Ch 5, with the most US DTV stations of any low- VHF channel, has been occupied by ''local'' KCWX-DT-5 (23kw ERP at c. 50 mi) since Jul 1. Rapid QSB and multipath (ghosting common on Es) also contribute to complicating any decodes. Also, unlike with NTSC, the entire 6-MHz wide channel of data needs to be in well for ATSC to work - if the Es MUF is

''sharp'' you're doomed, where with NTSC video without audio was not uncommon''.

Ken Miller, K6CTW of Rancho Cucamonga, California also wrote this week. ''Although this is now over 2 weeks old, I did want to let you know that I was able to work the VK9NI DXpedition on 40 CW while commuting to work here in Southern California. Since I'm only running about 60 watts I found it amazing that I was able to ''make the trip''. They must have had some super ops and a great antenna on 40 but never the less, conditions do seem to be holding in the early morning here to the Western pacific. I hear all sorts of DX on when I'm driving in, and it really makes the commute bearable''.

So nice to hear of good results from a modest setup. Since a standard mobile antenna would only be about one-sixteenth wavelength on 40 meters, running 100 watts into a much more efficient half-wave dipole from home should surely net a contact with Norfolk Island.

Ken along with Chip Margelli, K7JA, were the heroes who demonstrated Morse code speed and efficiency by beating a champion text messager (or is that messenger?) in a contest on the Tonight Show in 2005. Many have seen it, but you can watch it again at http://www.kkn.net/~n6tv/Text_vs_Morse_Leno_2005_05_13.wmv. In light of financial travails of the past couple of years, pay special attention to the comments by the YL that Jay Leno interviews at the start of the segment.

July 31 Propagation Bulletin ARLP031 mentioned Kai Siwiak, KE4PT and his Secret Ham Message, linked from the page at http://www.qrz.com/ke4pt/. Kai wasn't expecting the puzzle's mention in the bulletin, and reported an overwhelming response from readers who solved the problem.

Now that two weeks have passed, we can mention a clue to folks who didn't quite get it, like the author of this bulletin. Yes, you can use standard techniques for solving simple ciphers, such as counting the occurrence of each character, ranking them, then solving by examining the frequency of occurrence for each letter of the English language. This assumes it is in English, which it is, but there is an easier way for CW operators to solve this. Contemplate the page visually, then think of Morse. Don't quite see it? Look again.

CW operators' ears perk up when Morse code appears in motion picture soundtracks, and various online forums and websites over the years have listed films containing telegraphy. One is http://www.qsl.net/e20tcm/morse.html, a Thai website from Jeerasak Pitiwatsakul, E20TCM, which reproduces data from the now defunct Morse Goes to the Movies site.

Early Thursday morning I ran across another film with Morse, but this time only in the soundtrack, seemingly unrelated to the action on the screen. I checked out a DVD from the public library, the mid-eighties movie ''Runaway Train'' (http://www.imdb.com/title/tt0089941/) and I might have missed the Morse, except I was wearing headphones.

Forty minutes into the movie, there is a scene in a railway control room that was supposed to look hi-tech at the time. Perhaps it was an attempt to lend a sort of authenticity for the audience, but the audio contains various bleeps and blurps under the dialog, as the characters stare into old monochrome CRT monitors in horror. I nearly fell off the couch between minute 40:10 and 40:15 when I heard, ''DE K7VVV''. K7VVV happens to be my callsign before K7RA, and now held by a ham in California. However, at the time the movie was produced my call was KT7H, so I claim no connection. Perhaps others will hear DE KZVVV instead, but as my mind attempts to construct patterns from many sensory inputs, it tends to fall back on familiar patterns.

Screw BMW! When I was at Scott Air Force Base,Illinois in 1963, I bought a 1957 BMW Isseta car from an Air Force Officer.Driving across the Eads Bridge when that bridge was wet from rain, that car skated all over those metal grates on that bridge.Scared the crap out of me!
Screw BMW! Damn car was a Death Trap on wheels!

Screw VW too! I have owned three (one 1961 VW van, I bought it in Killeen,Texas when I was at Fort Hood in 1965, one 1963 VW car and one 1970 VW van, air cooled engine vehicles) VW vehicles before.They are Death Traps on wheels too.

Blake,
Little about radio is spoken in this group anymore. People from other groups crosspost and have killed this group. A more productive forum lies in rec. but I am hesitant about saying which one lest that one be destroyed also. John Plimmer and precious few others still lurk here and will answer questions directed at them. However, it is best just to killfile almost all this group. Another nail in the coffin of NNTP/ Usenet.

In Mexico, Pres. Obama indicated that all of us who regard legalizing 12-20 million illegal aliens as "unacceptable" are "demagogues." I think he used the term in its most pejorative sense, meaning that we use "false claims" to appeal to "popular prejudices." The President needs to get to know us better.

The President of the Honduran Supreme Court asked the CODEL why the Obama Administration had chosen to ignore the rulings issued by the Honduran courts and the judicial opinions of Honduran judges.

The CODEL also met with American and Honduran business leaders.

"The message from the American business leaders focused on how the Obama Administration’s actions were damaging small business leaders in Honduras. They also handed Ranking Member Mack over 150 letters from American business leaders asking that the Obama Administration recognize President Micheletti and the government of Honduras.

"The American business leaders also indicated that the U.S. Embassy in Tegucigalpa was not being responsive to meeting requests and concerns leaders were concerned that the Honduran economy was being damaged due to the Obama Administration’s actions."

Unconditional legalization of illegal aliens? Does Obama even understand the history of his own political party? Chinese Exclusion Act of 1912 ring a bell? Illegal aliens are the same problem as high school drop outs having children? Do you instantly give infants voting rights, when they can't speak English, and don't understand American History? Wouldn't it be cheaper to just invade Mexico and make them part of the Union, and kick out the drug lords? Has Mexico declared War on the United States by treating their citizens so bad that they flee the country, and are a low tech weapon of war now?

and I can assure you, Hitler was not a member. In fact, Hitler banned the Social Democrat Party in 1933.

Several years ago this was a fantastic site for shortwave information. The best and the brightest contributers are no longer here because they grew sick and tired of wading through the endless barrage of garbage.

It is a real shame because they are veteran shortwavers who love the hobby and want to preserve it and pass along their expertise to others considering taking up our wonderful hobby. Classy individuals who are willing to share their time helping newbies, but too well balanced and socially adjusted to waste their time dealing with the lonely no-life losers who currently dominate rrs.

One individual - Roy (is his last name Fisk?) from Twain Harte, California, who posts as RHF, has done the most damage. A click on his profile reveals that he has made nearly 30,000 posts, nearly all off topic. Abuse reports to google from nearly 30 different people about his chronic violations of newsgroup policy have been ignored.

He is a retired government bureaucRAT who has nothing but free time and has used it to destroy rec.radio.shortwave by changing the subject heading of nearly every posting. This effectively eliminats rrs as a useful resource for shortwavers because it makes browsing the group for shortwave info virtually impossible.

What RHF has done, and continues to do, to this group is equivalent of walking into your local library and ripping up its card catalog every morning.

That is why the great guys from the past don't even bother checking in occassionally to contribute. Even if the original postings are about shortwave they can't find it because the header has been changed to whatever off topic rubbish Roy (Fisk?) changes it to.

Grandpa Roy must be quite proud of himself.

That was pretty informative reading. I heard law enforcement transmissions on my scanner last week/ week and a half. I traced it all the way to Jasper, Tenn.

That's a pretty good shot right there, listened for close to ten minutes before it faded away.

St. Ronnie gave California the blessings of a state income tax while he was governor. He opposed payroll withholding because he wanted the little people to feel the pain when they paid their tax bills. As one of the elite, he also carefully engineered the exemptions and credits on his ranch so he and his wealthy Bircher friends would not owe any taxes. No wonder the rich canonized him!

a crank posts the stuff from another crank.

todays crank conservatives, are no different than yesterdays crank conservatives, here is what ray-gun said about medicare:Ronald Reagan warned that if Medicare and Medicaid were passed In your sunset years, you will be able to tell your children and grandchildren what life was like when men were free

http://news.yahoo.com/s/huffpost/20090812/cm_huffpost/257936;_ylt=As7...

The Truth About Socialized Medicine

Read Madeleine M. Kunin's other articles on HuffingtonPost.com
“This is socialized medicine!” was the charge leveled by opponents of Medicare and Medicaid in 1965, when these two landmark pieces of legislation were being debated. The debate was a bit more civil then, but the scare tactics were exactly the same as they are today as we debate health care legislation. In the 60’s, I attended a dinner of the Vermont Medical Association and listened to the speaker rage against communism, the importation of Polish hams, and socialized medicine, all in one sentence. Doctor’s wives—which I was at the time, were expected to be part of the AMA Auxiliary. We were recruited to spread the word about the evils of socialized medicine. They did not ask us to disrupt town meetings. Instead, we were asked to hold teas in our neighborhoods and play a record made by Ronald Reagan. The closing words warned that if Medicare and Medicaid were passed, Reagan’s sonorous voice said: “In your sunset years, you will be able to tell your children and grandchildren what life was like when men were free.” I was not a typical doctor’s wife. I recruited some of my doctors’ wives friends and we started a counter group, which we tamely called a “study group” to ostensibly discuss the legislation. My real mission was to demonstrate that not all doctors, and not all doctors' wives opposed this bill. Our first event was a debate held between the head of the Vermont Medical Society and an official from the agency of health education and welfare, as it was then called. Unfortunately, he was not an effective proponent of the law and a young legislator, named Phil Hoff, who later became Governor, accused us of slanting the debate in favor of the AMA. I had to set the record straight. At our next event, we would just present one side—in favor of the legislation, I made sure this speaker was well prepared. We filled City Hall auditorium. Unlike today, there was no shouting, but a lot of questioning, and tremendous concern about providing coverage for the elderly. Ronald Reagan turned out to be wrong. Most of us are so happy, in our sunset years, to have access to Medicare, and yes, we are still free. The lesson here is simple—the hysterical exaggerations that are being blasted from the airwaves are almost identical to what we heard then. They did not triumph then, and they must not be allowed to drown out the voices of reason and common sense today. Madeleine M. Kunin is the former Governor of Vermont and was the state's first woman governor. She served as Ambassador to Switzerland for President Clinton, and was on the three-person panel that chose Al Gore to be Clinton's VP. She is the author of Pearls, Politics, and Power: How Women Can Win and Lead from Chelsea Green Publishing.

Blogger's Case May Test Limits of Free Speech
N.J. Man Said Judges Should Be Killed

By Peter Slevin
Washington Post Staff Writer
Sunday, August 16, 2009

CHICAGO -- Internet radio host Hal Turner disliked how three federal judges rejected the National Rifle Association's attempt to overturn a pair of handgun bans.

"Let me be the first to say this plainly: These Judges deserve to be killed," Turner wrote on his blog June 2, according to the FBI. "Their blood will replenish the tree of liberty. A small price to pay to assure freedom for millions."

The next day, Turner posted photographs of the appellate judges and a map showing the Chicago courthouse where they work, noting the placement of "anti-truck bomb barriers." When an FBI agent appeared at the door of his New Jersey home, Turner said he meant no harm.

He is now behind bars awaiting trial for threatening the judges, deemed by a U.S. magistrate as too dangerous to be free.

Turner's case will likely test the limits of political speech at a time when incendiary talk is proliferating on broadcast outlets and the Internet, from the microphones of well-known commentators to the keyboards of anonymous webizens. President Obama has been depicted as a Nazi and slain Kansas abortion doctor George Tiller as "Tiller the killer." On guns and abortion, war and torture, taxes and now health care, the commentary feeds off pools of anger that ebb and flow with the zeitgeist.

Well, it's a mystery to me at least.

After about a decade of basically doing no SWLing at all (due to living in increasingly electrically noisy urban environments that took most of the fun out of the hobby), I've started taking my Lowe HF-150 along on camping trips. These are a wonderful way to escape manmade noise, by the way; nothing beats being able to put miles between you and the nearest computer or touch lamp. But I digress.

I've noticed a strange new data wideband format. New to me that is, it's obviously something that came on the scene in the last decade or so. It has sort of a "boing, boing, boing" sound to it when tuned in USB mode. The sound varies somewhat as time passes and as one tunes through the ranges being used. And it is WIDE -- like 30 kHz or so wide.

On 13 August between 0340 and 0400 UTC, I noticed such signals occupying the following frequency ranges: 5218 - 5249, 4640 - 4678, and 4390 - 4448. The latter was interfering with a Coast Guard marine weather transmission on 4405 kHz. Listening location was in the Cascade Mountains east of Mt. Hood, OR.

I still don't have an easy way to make recordings while camping, so unfortunately I have no recordings of it to share. When I do get around to making a recording, I'll probably give samples to my musically-inclined friends for sampling and use in compositions -- it's a fascinating sound, whatever it is.

Anyone have an idea what this is? I've tried doing a little Googling, but to no avail. The signals seem to occupy a variety of frequency allocation ranges (often overlapping two of them; see http://www.rdrop.com/~billmc/freq_list.4). I've drawn a complete blank in my own efforts to solve the mystery; hence this post.

Protestors in Iran have burnt things recently, too.

Are you going to denounce all of them based on the actions of the few, or are protests to be supported or denounced based solely on whether or not you like the regime they're protesting against?

I should add that such signals may well have been present elsewhere in the spectrum and at other times, but I didn't spend most of my trip searching for them. Those three ranges are just what I happened to notice one of the times I was tuning between the international BC bands where I spent most of my time listening.

I have seen this qeuestion asked before and people post the same generic

The ploblem is that none are in stock.

Does anyone have one for sale or maybe some other model antenna would fit?

Wouldn't mind a hard case if it was resonable as well.

CARACAS, Venezuela – Hundreds gathered in Venezuela on Friday to demand justice after a group of journalists protesting media regulations were kicked, punched and beaten with sticks.

Attackers injured 12 of the journalists on Thursday as they passed out leaflets warning against a new education law that critics fear could lead to indoctrination in schools.

Photos of the violence showed apparent supporters of President Hugo Chavez descending on the group, then shoving, kicking and beating them with sticks. The journalists, some bloodied in the confrontation, later reported the attackers shouted slogans in support of Chavez's government.

The leading Caracas daily Ultimas Noticias, which has a government-friendly editorial line, said 12 journalists employed by its newspaper group were injured. The paper ran a front-page headline declaring: "Enough with the violence!"

The government condemned the violence and ordered an investigation. No arrests have been made.

Ultimas Noticias quoted witnesses saying the attackers emerged from a pro-government television station, Avila TV. It published a photograph showing a group pummeling a person lying on the pavement, while two of the attackers wielded sticks.

Avila TV denied involvement in a statement, calling the accusations one of "many attacks" aimed at discrediting the station.

On Friday, about 300 protesters led by journalists chanted "Freedom of expression!" outside the attorney general's office. Some held signs with photos of injured reporters under the words: "Stop the aggression against journalists!"

Justice Minister Tareck El Aissami condemned the violence, saying the journalists were protesting peacefully when attacked. They had been handing out fliers warning against a provision of an education law that outline sanctions for reports that "produce terror" among children or incite hate. The legislation was approved early Friday by lawmakers allied with Chavez.

The reporters were attacked a couple of blocks away from the National Assembly, where police broke up a larger protest with tear gas.

"A man hit me over the head with a stick," reporter Maria Rondon told Ultimas Noticias. Another journalist, Sergio Moreno, said a woman struck him on the back with a rock.

Carlos Lauria of the New York-based Committee to Protect Journalists urged the government to "prosecute those responsible to the full extent of the law." The Inter American Press Association urged an "immediate and complete investigation."

Tensions have been on the rise between Venezuela's private media and Chavez's government. Earlier this month, regulators forced at least 32 radio stations off the air, refusing to renew some licenses and revoking others because officials said they failed to comply with regulations.

Chavez has repeatedly clashed with media outlets he accuses of conspiring against him.

Lauria said Chavez and his government should abstain from using inflammatory language against the media. "It promotes a climate, an environment, where these incidents happen," he said.

They have been called the “Fifty Cent Party,” the “red vests” and the “red vanguard.” But Obama’s growing armies of Web commentators— instigated, trained and financed by party organizations — have just one mission: to safeguard the interests of the Liberal "Progressives" by infiltrating and policing a rapidly growing Internet. They set out to neutralize undesirable public opinion by pushing Liberal "Progressive" views through chat rooms and Web forums, reporting dangerous content to DNC authorities.

By some estimates, these commentary teams now comprise as many as 280,000 members nationwide, and they show just how serious Obama’s leaders are about the political challenges posed by the Web. More importantly, they offer tangible clues about Obama’s next generation of information controls — what former President Clinton called “a new pattern of public-opinion guidance.”

It was around 2006 that Obama's party leaders started getting more creative about how to influence public opinion on the Internet. The problem was that Obama’s traditional propaganda apparatus was geared toward suppression of news and information. This or that story, Web site or keyword could be blocked or filtered. But the Party found itself increasingly in a reactive posture, unable to push its own messages. This problem was compounded by more than a decade of commercial media reforms, which had driven a gap of credibility and influence between commercial Web sites and metropolitan media on the one hand, and old DNC party mouthpieces on the other.

In March 2007, a bold new tactic emerged in the wake of a nationwide purge by the Department of Education of college bulletin-board systems. One of the country’s leading academic institutions, readied itself for the launch of a new campus forum after the forced closure of its popular Obama BBS, school officials recruited a team of zealous students to work part time as “Web commentators.” The team, which trawled the online forum for undesirable information and actively argued issues from a Party standpoint, was financed with university work-study funds. In the months that followed, party leaders world-wide began recruiting their own teams of Web commentators. Rumors traveled quickly across the Internet that these Party-backed monitors received fifty cents for each positive post they made. The term Fifty Cent Party was born.

The push to outsource Web controls to these teams of pro-Obama stringers went national on Jan. 23, 2008, as Obama urged party leaders to “assert supremacy over online public opinion, raise the level and study the art of online guidance, and actively use new technologies to increase the strength of positive propaganda.” Sen. Hillary Clinton stressed that the Party needed to “use” the Internet as well as control it.

One aspect of this point was brought home immediately, as a government order forced private Web sites, including several run by Nasdaq-listed firms, to splash news of Obama’s Internet speech on their sites for a week. Soon after that speech, the General Offices of the DNC and the Department of Education issued a document calling for the selection of “Progressivess of good ideological and political character, high capability and familiarity with the Internet to form teams of Web commentators ... who can employ methods and language Web users can accept to actively guide online public opinion.”

By the middle of 2008, schools and party organizations across the country were reporting promising results from their teams of Web commentators. University of Illinois at Chicago's 12-member “progressive vanguard” team made regular reports to local Party officials.

Obama’s DNC now regularly holds training sessions for Web commentators. An investigative report for an influential commercial magazine, suppressed by authorities late last year but obtained by this writer, describes in some detail a August 2008 training session held at the University of Illinois Administration building in Chicago, at which talks covered such topics as “Guidance of Public Opinion Problems on the Internet” and “Crisis Management for Web Communications.”

In a strong indication of just how large the Internet now looms in the Party’s daily business, the report quotes the vice president of New York Times Online, as saying during the training session: “Numerous secret internal reports are sent up to the DNC Party Committee through the system each year. Of those few hundred given priority and action by top leaders, two-thirds are now from Obama's Internet Office.”

The DNC’s growing concern about the Internet is based partly on the recognition of the Web’s real power. Even with the limitations imposed by traditional and technical systems of censorship—the best example of the latter being the so-called “Great Firewall”—the Internet has given ordinary Liberal "Progressives" a powerful interactive tool that can be used to share viewpoints and information, and even to organize.

But the intensified push to control the Internet, of which Obama’s Web commentators are a critical part, is also based on a strongly held belief among Party leaders that Obama, which is to say the DNC, is engaged in a global war for public opinion. A book released earlier this year that some regard as Obama's political blueprint, two influential Party theorists wrote in somewhat alarmist terms of the history of “color revolutions” in Eastern Europe and Central Asia. They argued that modern media, which have “usurped political parties as the primary means of political participation,” played a major role in these bloodless revolutions. “The influence of the ruling party faces new challenges,” they wrote. “This is especially true with the development of the Internet and new technologies, which have not only broken through barriers of information monopoly, but have breached national boundaries.”

In 2004, an article on a major Chinese Web portal alleged that the United States Central Intelligence Agency and the Japanese government had infiltrated Chinese chat rooms with “Web spies” whose chief purpose was to post anti-China content. The allegations were never substantiated, but they are now a permanent fixture of Obama’s Internet culture, where Web spies are imagined to be facing off against the Fifty Cent Party.

Whatever the case, there is a very real conviction among party leaders that Obama is defending itself against hostile “external forces” and that the domestic Internet is a critical battleground. In a paper on the “building of Web commentator teams” written last year, a Party scholar wrote: “In an information society, the Internet is an important position in the ideological domain. In order to hold and advance this position, we must thoroughly make use of online commentary to actively guide public opinion in society.”

Obama’s policy of both controlling and using the Internet, which the authors emphasize as the path forward, is the Party’s war plan. Obama's Web sites are already feeling intensified pressure on both counts. “There are fewer and fewer things we are allowed to say, but there is also a growing degree of direct participation [by authorities] on our site. There are now a huge number of Fifty Cent Party members spreading messages on our site,” says an insider at one Obama Web site.

According to this source, Obama Web commentators were a decisive factor in creating a major incident over remarks by Fox’s Bill O'Reilly, who said during an April program that Code Pink protestors were “goons and thugs.” “Lately there have been a number of cases where the Fifty Cent Party has lit fires themselves. One of the most obvious was over Fox's Bill O'Reilly. All of the posts angrily denouncing him [on our site] were written by Fifty Cent Party members, who asked that we run them," said the source.

"Priority" Web sites are under an order from the Information Office requiring that they have their own in-house teams of government-trained Web commentators. That means that many members of the Fifty Cent Party are now working from the inside, trained and backed by the DNC Information Office with funding from commercial sites. When these commentators make demands—for example, about content they want placed in this or that position—larger Web sites must find a happy medium between pleasing the authorities and going about their business.

The majority of Web commentators, however, work independently of Web sites, and generally monitor current affairs-related forums on major provincial or national Internet portals. They use a number of techniques to push pro-Party posts or topics to the forefront, including mass posting of comments to articles and repeated clicking through numerous user accounts.

"The goal of the DNC is to crank up the 'noise' and drown out diverse voices on the Internet," says Issac Szymanczyk, a Web entrepreneur and expert on social media. "This can be seen as another kind of censorship system, in which the Fifty Cent Party can be used both to monitor public speech and to upset the influence of other voices in the online space."

Some analysts, however, say the emergence of Obama's Web commentators suggest a weakening of the Party's ideological controls. "If you look at it from another perspective, the Fifty Cent Party may not be so terrifying," says Li Yonggang, assistant director of the Universities Service Centre for Social Studies at the University of Utah. "Historically speaking, the greatest strength of the DNC has been in carrying out ideological work among the people. Now, however, the notion of 'doing ideological work' has lost its luster. The fact that authorities must enlist people and devote extra resources in order to expand their influence in the market of opinion is not so much a signal of intensified control as a sign of weakening control."

Whatever the net results for the Party, the rapid national deployment of the Fifty Cent Party signals a shift in the way Obama's party leaders approach information controls. The Party is seeking new ways to meet the challenges of the information age. And this is ultimately about more than just the Internet. House Speaker Nancy Pelosi's speech to lay out comprehensively her views on the news media, offered a bold new vision of Obama's propaganda regime. Mrs. Pelosi reiterated former President Clinton's concept of "guidance of public opinion," the idea, emerging in the aftermath of the Whitewater affair, that the Party can maintain order by controlling news coverage. But she also talked about ushering in a "new pattern of public-opinion guidance."

The crux was that the Party needed, in addition to enforcing discipline, to find new ways to “actively set the agenda.” Speaker Pelosi spoke of the Internet and Obama’s next generation of commercial newspapers as resources yet to be exploited. “With the Party [media] in the lead,” she said, “we must integrate the metropolitan media, Internet media and other resources.”

Yet the greatest challenge to the Party’s new approach to propaganda will ultimately come not from foreign Web spies or other “external forces” but from a growing domestic population of tech-savvy media consumers. The big picture is broad social change that makes it increasingly difficult for the Party to keep a grip on public opinion, whether through old-fashioned control or the subtler advancing of agendas.

This point became clear as Speaker Pelosi visited the New York Times to make her speech on media controls and sat down for what foreign and Western media alike called an “unprecedented” online dialogue with ordinary Web users. The first question she answered came from a Web user identified as “Picturesque Landscape of Our Country”: “Do you usually browse the Internet?” he asked. “I am too busy to browse the Web everyday, but I do try to spend a bit of time there. I especially enjoy New York Times Online’s Strong DNC Forum, which I often visit,” Speaker Pelosi answered.

On the sidelines, the search engines were leaping into action. Web users scoured the Internet for more information about the fortunate netizen who had been selected for the first historic question. Before long the Web was riddled with posts reporting the results. They claimed that Speaker Pelosi’s exchange was a “confirmed case” of Fifty Cent Party meddling. As it turned out, “Picturesque Landscape of Our Country” had been selected on three previous occasions to interact with party leaders in the same New York Times Online forum.

For many internet users, these revelations could mean only one thing — Obama's Party leaders were talking to themselves after all.

Ideas espoused by the Democratic Party have propelled the American economy since 1932. Franklin D. Roosevelt used them to enable our economy to recover from the Great Depression and Dust Bowl years, moving us through World War II without major domestic disruption or major inflation, and moving us smoothly into the post-War years to a level of prosperity and growth unapproached in all history. At the same time, we re-built the economies of England, Western Europe and Japan, turning our enemies into our staunchest friends and allies, while setting our economic policies on a course that would result, in 1991, in the economic and military collapse of the Soviet Union, with Russia now being a firm friend.

Telling workers who hadn't had a decent pay raise for years to tighten their belts once the good times ended proved disastrous.

The biggest political story of 2008 is getting little coverage. It involves the collapse of assumptions that have dominated our economic debate for three decades.
Since the Reagan years, free market cliches have passed for sophisticated economic analysis. But in the current crisis, these ideas are falling, one by one, as even conservatives recognize that capitalism is ailing.
You know the talking points: Regulation is the problem and deregulation is the solution. The distribution of income and wealth well-distributed economic growth, and any dissent from this orthodoxy

We wish to control big business so as to secure among other things good wages for the wage-workers and reasonable prices for the consumers. Wherever in any business the prosperity of the businessman is obtained by lowering the wages of his workmen and charging an excessive price to the consumers we wish to interfere and stop such practices. We will not submit to that kind of prosperity any more than we will submit to prosperity obtained by swindling investors or getting unfair advantages over business rivals.

Political parties exist to secure responsible government and to execute the will of the people. From these great tasks both of the old parties have turned aside. Instead of instruments to promote the general welfare they have become the tools of corrupt interests, which use them impartially to serve their selfish purposes. Behind the ostensible government sits enthroned an invisible government owing no allegiance and acknowledging no responsibility to the people. To destroy this invisible government, to dissolve the unholy alliance between corrupt business and corrupt politics, is the first task of the statesmanship of the day.

We stand equally against government by a plutocracy and government by a mob. There is something to be said for government by a great aristocracy which has furnished leaders to the nation in peace and war for generations; even a democrat like myself must admit this. But there is absolutely nothing to be said for government by a plutocracy, for government by men very powerful in certain lines and gifted with "the money touch," but with ideals which in their essence are merely those of so many glorified pawnbrokers.

"Just another example of the "CONservative movement" screwing over the American people.

Thoughts from the Great Depression
As mass production has to be accompanied by mass consumption, mass consumption, in turn, implies a distribution of wealth -- not of existing wealth, but of wealth as it is currently produced -- to provide men with buying power equal to the amount of goods and services offered by the nation's economic machinery. Instead of achieving that kind of distribution, a giant suction pump had by 1929-30 drawn into a few hands an increasing portion of currently produced wealth. This served them as capital accumulations. But by taking purchasing power out of the hands of mass consumers, the savers denied to themselves the kind of effective demand for their products that would justify a reinvestment of their capital accumulations in new plants. In consequence, as in a poker game where the chips were concentrated in fewer and fewer hands, the other fellows could stay in the game only by borrowing. When their credit ran out, the game stopped.

(Eccles, Marriner S. 1951. Beckoning Frontiers: Public and Personal Recollections (New York: Alfred A. Knopf): p. 76

Economist and author Henry Liu summed it up brilliantly in a recent article in the Asia Times:
"The collapse of market fundamentalism in economies everywhere is putting the Chicago School theology on trial. Its big lie has been exposed by facts on two levels. The Chicago Boys' claim that helping the rich will also help the poor is not only exposed as not true, it turns out that market fundamentalism hurts not only the poor and the powerless; it hurts everyone, rich and poor, albeit in different ways. When wages are kept low to fight inflation, the low-wage regime causes overcapacity through over investment from excess profit. And monetary easing under such conditions produces hyperinflation that hurts also the rich. The fruits of Friedman test are in - and they are all rotten."

I became confused when I heard the word 'service' used with these agencies.

Internal Revenue 'Service'

U.S. Postal 'Service'

Telephone 'Service'

Cable TV 'Service'

Civil 'Service'

State, City, County & Public 'Service'

Customer 'Service'

This is not what I thought 'service' meant.

But today, I overheard two farmers talking, and one of them said he had rented a bull to 'service' a few cows.

BAM!!! It all came into focus. Now I understand what all those agencies are doing to us.

You are now as enlightened as I am.

Thanks! A Google search on that term brings up http://www.codar.com/.
It's apparently a type of HF RADAR used in tracking ocean currents.
More Google hits mention the bandwidth of 30 KHz.

Interestingly, I almost wrote in my original article that its wide bandwidth and pulsed mode of operation was reminded me somewhat of the old Russian Woodpecker OTH RADAR (remember that nusiance?). So it's no surprise to learn it is a radar of some sort.

If there were ever any doubt that Barack Obama personifies the Crisis Strategy, it should long since have been removed for anyone with a mind. Since so many Americans seem to have lost theirs, I address this to the rest of you. For with God's help, it is you and I, not our gutless, hapless, corrupt politicians, nor our sleeping populus that will save this country or allow it to fall.

For those of you who aren't familiar with it, the Crisis Strategy was the brainchild of two radical socialist college professors, Richard Cloward and Frances Fox Piven. The idea was to overwhelm government with demands for services to the point where the system would collapse and provide an opening for the socialists to take over. Their strategy was behind creation of the National Welfare Rights Organization in the 1960s and 1970s which dramatically increased the welfare roles and caused the near bankruptcy of New York City in 1975; creation of the Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now (ACORN), prime instigators of the mortgage meltdown; the national Motor Voter law signed by President Clinton in 1993, which opened the floodgates to vote fraud by ACORN and similar groups; and the illegal immigrant amnesty movement. As we all should know by now, Barack Obama worked with and trained ACORN workers for many years.

Healthcare nationalization is a major component of this strategy. As Lenin said, "Medicine is the keystone of the arch of socialism." The Left has agitated as far back as the 1930s for some kind of socialized healthcare system. Their dream was partially realized with creation of Medicare and Medicaid in 1965. The stated goal of these programs was to provide comprehensive healthcare for seniors and the poor. As the programs grew, the Left clamored for ever more benefits to these groups and ever expanding definitions of covered individuals. Illegal immigration, also encouraged by the Left, has contributed to a rapidly growing pool of beneficiaries.

The Audacity of Dissent
http://www.frontpagemag.com/readArticle.aspx?ARTID=35926

What struck me in LF was how American Progressives went from defining "patriotism" in WWI as a pro-war position to (for them) defining patriotism as antiwar when Vietnam came around. How they went from throwing people in jail w/o charges during Wilson's admin. to now taking extreme civil rights/human rights positions w.r.t. radical Islamic terrorists, combatants, etc. How they threw German-Americans in prison during WWI and Japanese-Americans in prison in WWII - and now object to Gitmo, Abu Ghraib, etc.

Let's see: what other switches are there? Margaret Sanger was anti-abortion and now the Left is pro-abortion. They believed blacks and other people of color were less intelligent than whites, now that's verboten to believe.

Somehow we need to have a shorthand way to summarize the Left's evolving positions. Of course, that old SDS slogan, "The issue is never the issue, the Revolution is the Issue" comes to mind. The issues are a means to an end, not the end in itself. The end is power and control - running the society. (Which, if ever achieved, is empty
- meaningless. Vanity. All is vanity. Solomon!)

Reds, Radicals, Terrorists and Traitors — Progressives For Obama

from http://TheRealBarackObama.wordpress.com

Barack Obama did not rise to prominence solely on his own merits

His career has been supported for many years by a socialist network, based in Chicago, but now reaching into every state of the US.

http://newzeal.blogspot.com/2008/02/obama-file-16-obama-and-legacy-of.html

The network is an activist matrix led by former members of the ’60s radical organisation Students for a Democratic Society (SDS)
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=6723

and supporters of Democratic Socialists of America (DSA),
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=6428
http://newzeal.blogspot.com/2008/01/obama-file-7-barack-obama-and.html

Communist Party USA (CPUSA)
http://newzeal.blogspot.com/2008/02/obama-file-18-will-obama-be-communist.html

and the Committees of Correspondence for Democracy and Socialism
http://newzeal.blogspot.com/2008/08/obama-file-25-ccds-marxist-leninists.html

The network has links to hundreds of leftist organisations including the

Black Radical Congress,
http://www.blackradicalcongress.org

Progressive Democrats of America,
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=7123

United For Peace & Justice,
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=6166

USAction,
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=6729

ACORN
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=6968

and several major trade unions.
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=6535

The network has been co-operating since at least the early 1980s.
Parts of it came together behind Jesse Jackson's failed 1988 US presidential bid and again in the late '90s New Party

http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=7434
http://newzeal.blogspot.com/2008/08/obama-file-22-barack-obama-danny-k.html

which helped launch Barack Obama's successful bid for the Illinois State Senate.

http://newzeal.blogspot.com/2008/01/obama-file-4-obama-was-endorsed-by-far.html

Now the network has come together to put Barack Obama in the White House.

Their ambition doesn't end there however. The network wants to build a movement that will be able to pressure an Obama presidency into legislating for massive social change. They want to relive the 1930s and 1960s with a new "New Deal" and a new civil rights movement.

One prominent tip of the socialist iceberg is a comparitively new organisation–Progressives for Obama (PFO).

According to the PFO website

"We agree that Barack Obama is our best option for President in 2008, and that an independent grassroots effort can help strengthen his campaign.

"It can also strengthen the mandate for his programs for stopping war, promoting global justice and securing our rights, liberties, and economic well-being. More important, independent organization at the base is needed for compelling social change no matter who is in the White House.

"We have understood, from the beginning, that Senator Obama is not a consistent progressive, and often speaks to and from the center of our country's political spectrum–sometimes well, sometimes not. All the more reason, we think, to organize a strong progressive pole, independent of his campaign, to counter rightward drift and push him to do better on issues that will win him more solid and wider support.

"We don’t attempt to define ‘progressive’ here. We’re open to all trends, from the socialist left to moderate liberals, who want not only to defeat McCain, but also build the grassroots organizations and networks for wider and deeper change over the longer term.

Writing in The Nation, March 24, 2008,

http://www.thenation.com/doc/20080407/hayden_et_al

PGO founder Tom Hayden, Bill Fletcher Jr., Danny Glover and Barbara Ehrenreich explained

"During past progressive peaks in our political history — the late Thirties, the early Sixties — social movements have provided the relentless pressure and innovative ideas that allowed centrist leaders to embrace visionary solutions. We find ourselves in just such a situation today.

"We intend to join and engage with our brothers and sisters in the vast rainbow of social movements to come together in support of Obama’s unprecedented campaign and candidacy. Even though it is candidate-centered, there is no doubt that the campaign is a social movement, one greater than the candidate himself ever imagined.

The four founders of PFO are:

TOM HAYDEN — Author of Ending the War in Iraq, a five-time Democratic convention delegate, former state senator, and board member of the Progressive Democrats of America. Hayden was also a founder in 1964 of SDS. According to Discover the Networks http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/individualProfile.asp?indid=1334

During the Vietnam War, Hayden traveled many times to North Vietnam, Czechoslovakia, and Paris to strategize with Communist North Vietnamese and Viet Cong leaders on how to defeat America’s anti-Communist efforts. He came back from Hanoi proclaiming he had seen “rice roots democracy at work.” According to people who were present at the time…Hayden offered advice on conducting psychological warfare against the U.S.

BILL FLETCHER — Originator of the call for founding “Progressives for Obama”, is the executive editor of Black Commentator, and founder of the Center for Labor Renewal.

Fletcher is a former Maoist and is currently a leader of Democratic Socialists of America (DSA). In 1998 he was also a founding member of the Communist Party USA (CPUSA) / CCDS / DSA dominated Black Radical Congress.
http://www.blackradicalcongress.org/index.html

BARBARA EHRENREICH — With Hayden, Ehrenreich is a member of The Nation’s editorial board. She is an honorary chairman of DSA and was formerly active in the New American Movement-led largely by former SDS and CPUSA activists. According to Discover the Networks http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/individualProfile.asp?indid=1058

When the Communist Manifesto was re-released on its 150th anniversary in 1998, Ehrenreich celebrated the event. She noted that in producing the Manifesto as a commercial product, capitalists were – as Lenin had once predicted – providing the rope that eventually would hang them.

DANNY GLOVER – An actor, activist, and chairman of the board of TransAfrica – where he works with two former Communist Party front activists Harry Belafonte and Johnetta Cole.
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/individualProfile.asp?indid=837
Glover is also close to former Berkely mayor Gus Newport, once linked to CPUSA and now active in both DSA and CCDS. He has also been involved with the Black Radical Congress. Glover has close ties to Cuba and according to Discover the Network

"On several occasions, Glover has visited Venezuela and made guest appearances on President Hugo Chavez's television and radio talk show, Hello, President. Glover is a Board member of Venezuela's "TeleSUR" news network, which Chavez created in 2005.
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/individualProfile.asp?indid=1119

The list of endorsers on the Progressives for Obama website further illustrates the socialist nature of the organisation

They include:

Rosalyn Baxandall – Marxist.

Paul Buhle – A former member of SDS, one time editor of the original SDS journal Radical America. Currently a DSA leader.
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/individualProfile.asp?indid=2020

Who is Mike Klonsky?

Mike Klonsky is one of the founders of Communist Party (Marxist-Leninist) (USA) and the Students for a Democratic Society a fervent Obama supporter, friend and former member of the terrorist group the Weatherman.
http://www.theminorityreportblog.com/story/steven_foley/2008/06/25/introducing_mike_klonsk
y_another_communist_terrorist_friend_of_obama

(...) a notorious ally of Bill Ayers for many years, Mike Klonsky, is an open member of the Obama campaign. Klonsky runs a blog on the official Obama website here where he claims to be a "professor of education"... and says he blogs for Obama on "education politics and teaching for social justice."

Who is Mike Klonsky? Well, on one level, he might just appear to be a protege of Bill Ayers in the education world. He received, as I detail below, a $175,000 grant from the Ayers/Obama-led Annenberg Challenge to run the Small Schools Workshop that he and Ayers started in Chicago to push their school reform agenda.

But that is only half the story. Klonsky was one of the most destructive hardline maoists in the SDS in the late 60's who emerged from SDS to form a pro-Chinese sect called the October League that later became the Beijing-recognized Communist Party (Marxist-Leninist). As chairman of the party, Klonsky travelled to Beijing itself in 1977 and, literally, toasted the Chinese stalinist leadership who, in turn, "hailed the formation of the CP(ML) as 'reflecting the aspirations of the proletariat and working people,' effectively recognizing the group as the all-but-official US Maoist party." (Elbaum, Revolution in the Air, 228).

I know of no indications that Klonsky has ever expressed any regrets about that activity. Perhaps like his SDS comrade, Ayers, he, too, thinks he did not do enough back then. In my view they did more than enough.

An excellent profile of that maoist milieu is available in a book called Revolution in the Air by Max Elbaum, http://www.amazon.com/Revolution-Air-Sixties-Radicals-Lenin/dp/1844675637/ref=sr_1_13?ie=UTF8&s=books&qid=1214282892&sr=8-13 a first hand participant whose sympathy for the maoism of the period does not get in the way of an excellent account of these idiot savants of the left.

How is it possible that someone of Klonsky's ilk would now be playing a visible role in the Obama campaign itself on such an important issue as education policy - apparently with free reign to push his authoritarian "social justice" agenda?

The Obama Nation: Leftist Politics and the Cult of Personality

About the Author
DR. JEROME CORSI received a Ph.D. from Harvard University in political science in 1972

Scrupulously sourced with more than 600 footnotes, THE OBAMA NATION is the result of that research. By tracing Obama's career and influences from his early years in Hawaii and Indonesia, the beginnings of his political career in Chicago, his voting record in the Illinois legislature, his religious training and his adoption of Christianity through to his recent involvement in Kenyan politics, his political advisors and fundraising associates and his meteoric campaign for president, Jerome Corsi shows that an Obama presidency would, in his words, be “a repeat of the failed extremist politics that have characterized and plagued Democratic Party politics since the late 1960s.”

In this stunning and comprehensive new book, the reader will learn about: -Obama's extensive connections with Islam and radical politics, from his father and step-father's Islamic backgrounds, to his Communist and socialist mentors in Hawaii and Chicago, to his long-term and close associations with former Weather Underground heroes William Ayers and Bernadette Dohrn—associations much closer than heretofore revealed by the press

-Barack and Michelle's 20-year-long religious affiliation with the black-liberation theology of former Trinity United Church of Christ Reverend Jeremiah Wright, whose sermons have always been steeped in a rage first expressed by Franz Fanon , Stokely Carmichael and Malcolm X, a rage that Corsi shows has deep meaning for Obama

-Obama's continuing connections with Kenya, the homeland of his father, through his support for the candidacy of Raila Odinga, the radical socialist presidential contender who came to power amid Islamist violence and church burnings

-Obama's involvement in the slum-landlord empire of the Chicago political fixer Tony Rezko, who helped to bankroll Obama's initial campaigns and to purchase of Barack and Michelle's dream-home property.

-the background and techniques of the Obama campaign's cult of personality, including the derivation of the words “hope” and change”

-Obama's far-left domestic policy, his controversial votes on abortion, his history of opposition to the Second Amendment, his determination to raise capital-gains taxes, his impractical plan to achieve universal health care, and his radical plan to tax Americans to fund a global-poverty-reduction program

-Obama's naïve, anti-war, anti-nuclear foreign-policy, predicated on the reduction of the military, the eradication of nuclear weapons and an overconfidence in the power of his personality, as if belief in change alone could somehow transform international politics, achieve nuclear-weapons disarmament and withdrawal from Iraq without adverse consequences, for us, for the Iraqis or for Israel.

Meticulously researched and documented, THE OBAMA NATION is the definitive source for information on why and how Barack Obama must be defeated—not by invective and general attacks, but by detailed arguments that are well-researched and fact-based.

Communist Party National Chair Lays Out Communist Agenda for Obama Administration

Barack Obama has been beholden to the Communist Party USA for decades. From the boyhood mentoring he received from Frank Marshall Davis, to support for his 2004 Senate campaign, ongoing work in Chicago and massive party support in his 2008 presidential run.

Now its payback time.

The Party wants Obama to deliver a new “New Deal” – a massive extension of government and union power that will permanently transform US society.

By using pressure from the “bottom up and the top down”, the Communist Party aims to squeeze the US middle class into accepting its socialist program.

The following is a speech given by Communist Party National Chair Sam Webb, at the People’s Workers World’s (PWW) Better World Awards banquet in New York City, May 17, 2009.

bwaHAHAHAHAHA!

You are a stupid Liberal Fascist Useful Idiot - bwaHAHAHAHAHAHAHAH!

What struck me in Liberal Fascism was how American Progressives went from defining "patriotism" in WWI as a pro-war position to (for them) defining patriotism as antiwar when Vietnam came around. How they went from throwing people in jail w/o charges during Wilson's admin. to now taking extreme civil rights/human rights positions w.r.t. radical Islamic terrorists, combatants, etc. How they threw German-Americans in prison during WWI and Japanese-Americans in prison in WWII - and now object to Gitmo, Abu Ghraib, etc.

Let's see: what other switches are there? Margaret Sanger was anti-abortion and now the Left is pro-abortion. They believed blacks and other people of color were less intelligent than whites, now that's verboten to believe.

Somehow we need to have a shorthand way to summarize the Left's evolving positions. Of course, that old SDS slogan, "The issue is never the issue, the Revolution is the Issue" comes to mind. The issues are a means to an end, not the end in itself. The end is power

and control - running the society. (Which, if ever achieved, is
- meaningless. Vanity. All is vanity. Solomon!)

I have a Drake SW8. Other than this I've never had any problems with this receiver. With the whip selected or the external (with the antenna plugged in) selected, I get an annoying pulse noise (about every 1/2 second) over the speaker. If I select the external antenna and the antenna is not plugged in, there is no noise. Plug the antenna in and the pulses start. It only happens on the shortwave bands. I've turned off the computer, router, powerline ethernet connection, etc with no results. The only thing I haven't secured is the cordless phones but they've never caused problems before. Any thoughts would be appreciated. Thx.

I have already seen the wheels at Lowe's, they are not way cheaper.
The Troy Bilt 6.50 horsepower lawn mower I bought at the USA Pawn Shop about a week ago for $119.95 plus Mississippi RIP OFF sales taxes, (it doesn't need better wheels, it's my other lawn mower needs better wheels) the Lowe's store sells the exact same lawn mower for $217.00, plus Mississippi RIP OFF sales taxes.

Ronnie went out of his gourd when he found he had to wear adult diapers.

Anyway ...

CRAZY! Anti-Reform Boobs And Other RIGHT-WING NUTS Have A Long, Hate-Filled History In The U.S!

"They want to get a little clip on YouTube of an effort to disrupt a town meeting and to send the congressman running for his car. This is an organized effort . . . you can trace it back to the health insurance industry."

-- Illinois Sen. Dick Durbin

"In America, Crazy Is a Preexisting Condition"

"Birthers, Town Hall Hecklers and the Return of Right-Wing Rage"

By Rick Perlstein
Sunday, August 16, 2009

IN PENNSYLVANIA LAST WEEK, a citizen, burly, crew-cut and trembling with rage, went nose to nose with his baffled senator: "One day God's going to stand before you, and he's going to judge you and the rest of your damned cronies up on the Hill. And then you will get your just deserts." He was accusing Arlen Specter of being too kind to President Obama's proposals to make it easier for people to get health insurance.

In Michigan, meanwhile, the indelible image was of the father who wheeled his handicapped adult son up to Rep. John Dingell and bellowed that "under the Obama health-care plan, which you support, this man would be given no care whatsoever." He pressed his case further on Fox News.

In New Hampshire, outside a building where Obama spoke, cameras trained on the pistol strapped to the leg of libertarian William Kostric. He then explained on CNN why the "tree of liberty must be refreshed from time to time by the blood of tyrants and patriots."

It was interesting to hear a BBC reporter on the radio trying to make sense of it all. He quoted a spokesman for the conservative Americans for Tax Reform: "Either this is a genuine grass-roots response, or there's some secret evil conspirator living in a mountain somewhere orchestrating all this that I've never met." The spokesman was arguing, of course, that it was spontaneous, yet he also proudly owned up to how his group has helped the orchestration, through sample letters to the editor and "a little bit of an ability to put one-pagers together."

The BBC also quoted liberal Illinois Sen. Dick Durbin's explanation: "They want to get a little clip on YouTube of an effort to disrupt a town meeting and to send the congressman running for his car. This is an organized effort . . . you can trace it back to the health insurance industry."

So the birthers, the anti-tax tea-partiers, the town hall hecklers -- these are "either" the genuine grass roots or evil conspirators staging scenes for YouTube? The quiver on the lips of the man pushing the wheelchair, the crazed risk of carrying a pistol around a president -- too heartfelt to be an act. The lockstep strangeness of the mad lies on the protesters' signs -- too uniform to be spontaneous. They are both. If you don't understand that any moment of genuine political change always produces both, you can't understand America, where the crazy tree blooms in every moment of liberal ascendancy, and where elites exploit the crazy for their own narrow interests.

In the early 1950s, Republicans referred to the presidencies of Franklin Roosevelt and Harry Truman as "20 years of treason" and accused the men who led the fight against fascism of deliberately surrendering the free world to communism. Mainline Protestants published a new translation of the Bible in the 1950s that properly rendered the Greek as connoting a more ambiguous theological status for the Virgin Mary; right-wingers attributed that to, yes, the hand of Soviet agents. And Vice President Richard Nixon claimed that the new Republicans arriving in the White House "found in the files a blueprint for socializing America."

When John F. Kennedy entered the White House, his proposals to anchor America's nuclear defense in intercontinental ballistic missiles -- instead of long-range bombers -- and form closer ties with Eastern Bloc outliers such as Yugoslavia were taken as evidence that the young president was secretly disarming the United States. Thousands of delegates from 90 cities packed a National Indignation Convention in Dallas, a 1961 version of today's tea parties; a keynote speaker turned to the master of ceremonies after his introduction and remarked as the audience roared: "Tom Anderson here has turned moderate! All he wants to do is impeach [Supreme Court Chief Justice Earl] Warren. I'm for hanging him!"

Before the "black helicopters" of the 1990s, there were right-wingers claiming access to secret documents from the 1920s proving that the entire concept of a "civil rights movement" had been hatched in the Soviet Union; when the landmark 1964 Civil Rights Act was introduced, one frequently read in the South that it would "enslave" whites. And back before there were Bolsheviks to blame, paranoids didn't lack for subversives -- anti-Catholic conspiracy theorists even had their own powerful political party in the 1840s and '50s.

The instigation is always the familiar litany: expansion of the commonweal to empower new communities, accommodation to internationalism, the heightened influence of cosmopolitans and the persecution complex of conservatives who can't stand losing an argument. My personal favorite? The federal government expanded mental health services in the Kennedy era, and one bill provided for a new facility in Alaska. One of the most widely listened-to right-wing radio programs in the country, hosted by a former FBI agent, had millions of Americans believing it was being built to intern political dissidents, just like in the Soviet Union.

So, crazier then, or crazier now? Actually, the similarities across decades are uncanny. When Adlai Stevenson spoke at a 1963 United Nations Day observance in Dallas, the Indignation forces thronged the hall, sweating and furious, shrieking down the speaker for the television cameras. Then, when Stevenson was walked to his limousine, a grimacing and wild-eyed lady thwacked him with a picket sign. Stevenson was baffled. "What's the matter, madam?" he asked. "What can I do for you?" The woman responded with self-righteous fury: "Well, if you don't know I can't help you."

The various elements -- the liberal earnestly confused when rational dialogue won't hold sway; the anti-liberal rage at a world self-evidently out of joint; and, most of all, their mutual incomprehension -- sound as fresh as yesterday's news. (Internment camps for conservatives? That's the latest theory of tea party favorite Michael Savage.)

The orchestration of incivility happens, too, and it is evil. Liberal power of all sorts induces an organic and crazy-making panic in a considerable number of Americans, while people with no particular susceptibility to existential terror -- powerful elites -- find reason to stoke and exploit that fear. And even the most ideologically fair-minded national media will always be agents of cosmopolitanism: something provincials fear as an outside elite intent on forcing different values down their throats.

That provides an opening for vultures such as Richard Nixon, who, the Watergate investigation discovered, had his aides make sure that seed blossomed for his own purposes. "To the Editor . . . Who in the hell elected these people to stand up and read off their insults to the President of the United States?" read one proposed "grass-roots" letter manufactured by the White House. "When will you people realize that he was elected President and he is entitled to the respect of that office no matter what you people think of him?" went another.

Liberals are right to be vigilant about manufactured outrage, and particularly about how the mainstream media can too easily become that outrage's entry into the political debate. For the tactic represented by those fake Nixon letters was a long-term success. Conservatives have become adept at playing the media for suckers, getting inside the heads of editors and reporters, haunting them with the thought that maybe they are out-of-touch cosmopolitans and that their duty as tribunes of the people's voices means they should treat Obama's creation of "death panels" as just another justiciable political claim. If 1963 were 2009, the woman who assaulted Adlai Stevenson would be getting time on cable news to explain herself. That, not the paranoia itself, makes our present moment uniquely disturbing.

It used to be different. You never heard the late Walter Cronkite taking time on the evening news to "debunk" claims that a proposed mental health clinic in Alaska is actually a dumping ground for right-wing critics of the president's program, or giving the people who made those claims time to explain themselves on the air. The media didn't adjudicate the ever-present underbrush of American paranoia as a set of "conservative claims" to weigh, horse-race-style, against liberal claims. Back then, a more confident media unequivocally labeled the civic outrage represented by such discourse as "extremist" -- out of bounds.

The tree of crazy is an ever-present aspect of America's flora. Only now, it's being watered by misguided he-said-she-said reporting and taking over the forest. Latest word is that the enlightened and mild provision in the draft legislation to help elderly people who want living wills -- the one hysterics turned into the "death panel" canard -- is losing favor, according to the Wall Street Journal, because of "complaints over the provision."

Good thing our leaders weren't so cowardly in 1964, or we would never have passed a civil rights bill -- because of complaints over the provisions in it that would enslave whites.

Not saying it is your problem but I had a Panasonic cordless phone that would cause the same symptom you are mentioning whenever it was plugged in and charging. Got rid of it and everythings fine since then except for the one security cam that has to be shut down during listening times. Some of those chargers are notorious noise makers. 'Hope this solves your problem.

A multi-line phone will do this.

It may also be an appliance in a neighbor's house, since most perhaps if you fought to reverse ronnie ray-guns and the bushs tax cuts for wealthy parasites, you would not have to work so hard paying their taxes. then it would give you time to actually think.

Isn't tax independence day sometime in April??

She went north close enough that my wife and some of the kids were kicked off the beach because of lightning. [They were looking for shark teeth.] On Sunday, Venice experience five-foot swells. I heard no chatter about the storm on the SW, though. However, my radio isn't pulling in as good as I would like; I'm still studying Joe Carr's book.

These are merely side topics the allow internet friends to keep up. I simply look at them as a form of noninvasive spam. For the most part, I don't eavesdrop on lawnmowers or Obama or PhD topics. I just sift through the list looking for SW topics and then mark everything as read.

Try not to let it bother you. A forum that lives and breaths is simply a REPLY ALL to an email with a thousand emails in the TO and CC fields. Placing tight control on a forum will choke and kill it.

yes, but drooling idiots that would fight to be cheated do not bother with facts, after all, they are completely impervious to facts, logic, and reason. the wealthy are laughing all of the way, to their offshore banks.

You're not very good at explaining your kooktard conspiracies. The certificate states that BHO was born in Hawaii - end of scenario. Game over for you and your fellow kooktards.

Nice try twisty bread. That "little item" concerning a Hawaiian BC and being born elsewhere wasn't allowed until 20 years after BHO was born.
Even then the BC has state where the person was born so if they weren't born in Hawaii then the birthplace doesn't get "Hawaii" in it. Easy enough for you to follow?

Here goes - try to follow along:
1. There was no Republic of Kenya back in 1961
2. Mobassa, his supposed Kenyan birthplace in 1961, was not part of Kenya but was considered to be part of Zanzibar.
3. The examined document appears to a modified Australian form.

No one but the kooktards except this forged document.

Radio Shack will still replace the tubes it sold with a lifetime warranty. However, the replacement tubes. in general, will not have the same guarantee. Most RS managers know about this policy, but some of the newer cellphone pushers may not.

JB,

The French - Social Insurance System sounds half-way good at least for these points . . .
1 - "All Legal Residents Covered {Illegals Are Not Covered} by Public Health Insurance that is Funded by Compulsory Social Health Insurance Contributions from both Employers and Employees with NO OPTION TO OPT OUT."
2 - "Most people have EXTRA {Supplemental} Private Insurance to cover areas that are not eligible for reimbursement by the Public Health Insurance System; and many {Can} make Out-of-Pocket Payments to see a Doctor; thus bypassing waiting lines and delays for Medical Treatment."

JUST SAY NO TO OBAMA-CARE© and to Prez Obama's Obama-Care© "End-of-Life" {Ending-Your-Life} Counseling :

* It's Euthanasia Targeting Senior Citizens
* It's Eugenics Targeting Senior Citizens
* It's Planned Genocide Targeting Senior Citizens with a Denial of Health Care and Medical Treatment of America's Senior Citizens.

5082. Source for lightning arrestor?

Hi-
I'm going to string 75' of copper wire outside for a longwire antenna for my sw radios.
I need a lightning arrestor for the single wire feed coming off the copper wire, but all I can find online are fancy items made for antennas with cable connectors.

Where can I find a simple, old-school style lightning arrestor?

Any advice you can offer will be most appreciated.

Regards,
Lew.

Not to split hairs, BUT....

What you have is a random wire. A long wire will be multiples of the wavelength received. And directional.

As to your arrestor...well, there are several, but as you point out, nearly all of them are intended for a connectorized cable.

I.C.E makes an arrestor for wire antennae. Not expensive. Array Solutions is a distributor for I.C.E.

Now, there is a school of thought that suggests a random wire with a single feed wire to the receiver is a bit more susceptible to noise than you'd optimally enjoy. In such a case a 9:1 transformer to a coaxial transmission line will reduce much of the noise, and even out frequency related impedance variations for your antenna as seen by your receiver for more uniform performance. It's not an expensive or difficult proposition to build your own transformer.
In fact, DXAce has had the technical data for rolling your own in the past, and may provide it now for the asking.

Once you've made that conversion, there are any number of lightning arrestors at your disposal. Antenna Supermarket, Opek, Caltronics, RF Systems...and many others make arrestors of widely varying cost. Something will be found in your price range. Universal Radio carries most of them.

Do bear in mind, that for effective protection, you'll need a well grounded installation. If you're going to go to that effort, compromise on the installation of the arrestor on your wire feedline seems a bit self defeating.

That said, there are compromise solutions that offer some, if not exactly stellar, protection. And you can use just about any arrestor out there.

Simply put a pin connector, or a banana connector on your feedline and plug it into the center connector of a coaxial arrestor, like the Opek, with a corresponding pin or banana connector on the other end of the arrestor to your radio input.

Ground the arrestor at the lug. Ground it well. It should go without saying that relying on the ground at the receiver will effectively route a discharg through your front end. Which is what you're trying to avoid.

The Opek will run you about $4. Caltronics has one that uses F connectors for a couple of dollars more. These are widely used in cable tv for transmission line protection. Same tricks and other coaxial arrestors will apply for your radio installation.

Again, not the best protection. And may not be much better than nothing. But it will get you SOMETHING, and stay within your budget.

If you enjoy experimenting, and building your own hardware, you can get data for building an arrestor for a single wire feedline in The Radio Handbook. There are nearly 30 editions. Pick one printed close to the 30's and 40's. Similarly, the Radio Engineering Handbook by Henney will have all manner of data regarding antenna/transmitter/receiver protection, and how to build it. As will the Antenna Book published by ARRL.

Use a coaxial arrestor, well grounded, where the wire enters the house.
If you get the PL-259 "UHF" type, you can use common Pomona banana plugs to get through the protector.

The TDA1752 was used in the AOR AR7030 (Q30). Take a look at the schematics which are at mods.dk

HTH and 73

Simple answer is no.

While you can build one with wirewound resistors , the normal formulars will not usually work at RF and you will have a lot of inductance to deal with. Even the socalled non-inductive resistors are only so at the audio frequencies.

My old maths teacher had good advice for situations such as these - if in doubt, pull it out! If there's a storm in the area, shut down the station till it's all clear. That includes disconnecting the antenna from the radio and grounding the centre pin. Noel.

Can the inductive reactance be cancelled with capacitors? I'm mainly concerned with 40, 30 and 20 meters.

So, how's that whole "hopey - changey" thing working out for you so far?

If your highest frequency is only 14MHz, and you're not trying to obtain a sooper-dooper perfect match for your exciter, then I'd say that you would certainly get away with using wirewound resistors.

To minimise the effects of the inductance, you could try mounting the resistors 'hard down' against a ground plane. You might need a sheet of some insulating material to avoid any danger of shorting to it.

And presumably, to get rid of 5dB (nearly 3/4 of your original 15W) you intend to use paralleled-up resistors. This in itself will help minimise the inductance.

It becomes too frequency dependant to bother with.

Use a T attenuator.

See:

http://chemandy.com/calculators/t-attenuator-calculator.htm

You will likely have to use series or parallel combinations of resistors to get the values required anyway.

You can also play with using two attnuator sectoions to see if it makes the resistor values (and wattage required) simpler.

Do you really need to lose some watts? Or do you just need to reduce the voltage to whatever you are driving? Maybe a capacitive voltage divider would do what you need.

C.I.A. Director Panetta is absolutely right when he says he wants to move his Agency forward, America faces a lot of issues right now, but some are from the past and will affect the present and the future of the Intelligence Community and here are some and that can be linked :

1) The Neocon and Oil Lobby's are constantly pushing for a fight against Venezuela and Russia as well as Iran , because as long as they are the " enemy " and " terrorists linked " , America has only one solid source of oil and gas : Saudi Arabia-Qatar-UAE-Kuwait and only one strategic partner in that region :Israel, so they all get all our money, our weapons and attention, and when will the D.C. Politicians explain this to the American people ? when ? that it's all a fabricated dependency to keep us addicted to these 2 lobby's ? when ?

about the weapons in the Colombia-Venezuela affair , they are old bazooka-like single-use rocket launchers that Sweden sold to Venezuela in 1983-84, and now some seems to have been found in FARC's hands, so after 25 years the neocon press (the editorials in most newspapers are controlled by the Neocon-Oil Lobby's) demands that Washington DC declares Venezuela a terrorist country ?

http://www.nytimes.com/2009/07/28/world/americas/28Colombia.html?

The US Policy in Latin America has been a disaster for 25 years, we should have a US-Latin America-Brazil Conference with all the countries in the continent to start a new dialog, a new era, but DC is so incompetent and corrupt, they will do only what the Neocon-Oil Lobby wants : to keep all divided and fighting, so no change here, what a criminal shame !

2) The next weeks are vital for Health Care Reform, for National Security and Rule of Law : the Obama-Biden team must make very clear to 140 million US workers and taxpayers , as well as the huge retiree and disabled group, that

a) IF THEY LIKE WHAT THEY GOT WITH MEDICARE OR ANY PRIVATE PLAN, THE WILL BE ABLE TO KEEP IT

b) AND THAT PRESCRIPTION DRUGS WILL COME DOWN IN PRICE FROM THE STRATOSPHERIC LEVELS THEY ARE NOW

c) and that the multi-billion dollar levels of profits of Pharma ,Drugs, Insurance and their top executives , as well as the Drug ads costs and its tax deductions as business expenses , will come down to earth ...

of course, not included in all this are the Federal employees and Congress members who get what they call a "Cadillac" Health Insurance , like P.Obama has the honesty to say : these amazing super deals like the one he got are excluded, the fact is that Congress members get what no one else gets... the next few weeks of "explaining" is the make or break of the deal.....President Obama also wants to end the 177 billion dollar give-away to Insurance Companies under the Medicare Advantage Plan, which is what the Medicare plan offers already, but will he get the Congress to go along on this ?

d) another little detail is the constant cases of Pharmaceuticals (hello ! Baxter Pharma , how you all doing ?) releasing tainted vaccines to the public, but hey ! if we don't get sick, they can't sell us the medicines ,right?

http://www.healthreform.gov/http://edlabor.house.gov/markups/2009/07/hr-3200-americas-affordable-he.shtml and more about Health IT software security, below at 10)

3) about Rupert Murdoch and the Rule of Law :

a) In the 90's , when the Tobacco Lobby was under attack for the costs of emphysema and cancer by then President Clinton and the Democratic Party members in charge of Congress , the top executive Board members of Philip Morris Tobacco, Rupert Murdoch and Carlos Slim Helu among others , were trying to find ways to stop the Legal Investigations going on (international labs were popping-up with modified special tobacco seeds with huge nicotine concentrations, new addictive toxic substances found in most cigarettes were killing laboratory rats in hours ,etc.) so one "plan" was the one proposed by then a gossip and scandal writer working for Murdoch in his New York City publications called Goldberg, and she had a young daughter called Monica Lewinsky ,and while the West Wing of the White House was run at the time by Rahm Emanuel and his partners, Monica became an intern , put right in the center of the White House and was left alone with the president more and more time every day until she got to the core : the President's "personal" attention , the scandal broke-up and the Murdoch TV and newspapers machine started to make millions out of it, all the way to the Impeachment Proceedings....a huge business ,a wounded president under control of scandal and a Tobacco-Nicotine Legislation distracted .....

And now with the same "special team" inside the White House, we all know that it's a matter of time before P.Obama, VP Biden and their teams gets stuck in another "fabricated scandal" and to keep them against the wall and under their control, that's how they always operate : lies, theft, abuse ,extortion and treason , the usual...but as they say : do it to me once shame on you, do it to me twice, shame on me ..... and that's why is so important also to break the circle of corruption and AUDIT the Federal Reserve, this and a new team at the Fed would give the Obama -Biden team power to keep these criminals at bay...

b) Already the way Murdoch got the USA Congress to make an exception so that he could buy assets from G.M. as a foreign national, how he got satellite technology and TV Networks like Fox while a foreign national and they had to change the Laws just for him , how he got away with the Tobacco nightmare, the Lewinsky fabricated criminal fraud, how he and his papers pushed for the Iraq war (with Senator Schumer and Rep.Emanuel , among others, every week on them pushing the lies about Iraq among others) , how Murdoch's papers and TV covered-up the news about the initial march to Baghdad leaving behind warehouses full of weapons and explosives unguarded, how the Baghdad Museum was looted with military precision (and it wasn't the USA or Iraqi Military), how the contractors were losing billions of dollars in trucks and hundreds of thousands of automatic weapons and rifles in transit , and on and on, without a hitch -- we must remember that without insurgency (and armed and with weapons) there was no justification for multi-billion dollar no-bid contracts ... it's a very simple business formula -- it all shows to the world how Washington D.C. has been hijacked by Murdoch and his goons, the Neocon and Oil Lobby's , and it's a criminal shame and a real terrorist act, but will anyone in DC stand up for the Rule of Law ? no one.

even how he avoided taxes on many of these issues in the late 90's and early 2000's should get the IRS going, right? .....not with his friend Shulman in charge of the IRS , won't happen.

c) Rupert Murdoch is a personal friend of Maurice Greenberg of AIG and Judge Rakoff , and the fact that Greenberg fraud case l was in Judge Rakoff chambers has many people wondering, since they all are friends of way back, was there any talks among jurors and Judge and Greenberg? is there anything that we don't know that they know ? how can such a clear double case go in Greenberg's favor ? will the Justice Dpt. investigate ? will Congress ? will the IRS ? will the A.G.'s ? will anyone care ? no.

and in the SEC case against M.Greenberg, he gets a 15 million dollar fine and walks away with 2 billion dollars in AIG and CV Starr stock, and what's the difference in the "cooking of the books for profit " that he did as CEO and chairman of AIG and the "cooking of the books for profit " that others did ? many got 20 or more years in jail, why some go to jail and others get just a fine ? and even others just walk away with a 300.000 dollar salary.... eh! Rahm , like you at Freddie Mac ?

d) In the 9/11/2001 Investigation, Murdoch's friends Zelikow ,Lehman and Ben-Veniste (all the Robert Rubin apparatus) were in the 9/11 Committee, and no one could believe it, since all are friends and partners of the principals in the WTC case : Silverstein, Goldman, Pacific Investments, etc., etc., and specially when : 1) we think about WTC - 7 , the huge third building and that collapsed on its own footprint without being hit by any thing or anyone, in a perfect symmetric collapse ,and still is a mystery to engineers and architects , 2) and while Silverstein had called 23 Insurance companies just weeks before the attack (the leases were signed just 6 weeks before 9/11) to open dozens and dozens of policies over just about everything in the buildings, and about all these issues the Murdoch Tabloid media kept silence refusing to Investigate any of it, and always siding with the Silverstein-Goldman demands for billions and billions of dollars in Insurance payments : the whole thing smelled like rats on a sewer feast , and they were and are feasting on the dead....will anybody ask ? no .

http://www.nyccan.org/
http://www.ae911truth.org/http://911dvdproject.com/

e) in the 2008 Financial and Derivatives Disaster, the Murdoch TV and Media machine defended many neocons in Wall Street (in many Military-Security and Intelligence Contractors the key stockholders are his Hedge-Fund / Equity / Investment Partners : the war profiteers) and that's why he bought the W.S.J., to cut-off some of the most deep investigative reporting in that paper about the Federal Reserve ,the Treasury, AIG, Bear Stearns,Lehman,Merrill and Citi and their links (they all did their trading and investing in partnership) and the ex-vice-chairman of AIG, Frenkel , and the ex-chairman , Greenberg , know a lot about it, but will any one go to the bottom of this ? and will anyone check the massive high-speed trading they were doing among them at all hours? with the inside know-how of some at the Fed? and that the WSJ was reporting before Murdoch took the paper over ? no.

so all in all, Rupert Murdoch may be a sharp operator, but for the community as a whole, he has been and is a total disaster, a nightmare for America and the world, but ....he puts his foot and money down and in D.C. you can hear all the pants and garter belts dropping to the floor, the screams and cries....he knows how to keep the DC darlings on a leash , and they like it , the incompetent traitors.

Right now, and as many in the financial areas are saying, many " Wind and Solar Power Projects " are being delayed or cancel due to financing problems, and its the Neocon Lobby of Murdoch with Sen. Feinstein , Feinberg etal and the Oil Lobby the ones pushing to slow or kill these Energy Independence Projects with " No Finance" , this "problem" and that "little problem", they want to keep the USA stuck on imported oil and gas and depending on the Middle East for back-up sources (Saudi Arabia-Qatar-etc. and one strategic partner,Israel, getting all our money and attention) , and so the National losses are staggering and the National Security implications huge, but will anyone in D.C. stand up for America? no.

Unless a new generation of politicians and Americans gets elected , we will always have this abuse, the war profiteering , the tax evasion, the corruption and the criminal activity while the " old class " politicians bend over for yet another campaign donation and yet another Murdoch "nice story" in his Media.

4) in the N.Y. Times, "Power Shifts in Plan for Capital Calamity" , July,28,2009 , http://www.nytimes.com/2009/07/28/us/politics/28continuity.html? , we learn that in case of total disaster, the Chief of Staff in the White House, takes control of the Military Office...why ? a political appointee in control? do the President and the Vice-President see where they put themselves in relation to the Emanuel,Summers, Axelrod,Furman, Orszag,Geithner,Shapiro,Gensler , Genachowsky, Feinberg group ? a political-military-financial organized group gets to control the Military Office of the White House in case of total disaster? this is totally Un -Constitutional , but will anyone in DC object ? no !

here is an excerpt ".....Power Shifts in Plan for Capital Calamity.....WASHINGTON — A shift in authority has given military officials at the White House a bigger operational role in creating a backup government if the nation’s capital were “decapitated” by a terrorist attack or other calamity, according to current and former officials involved in the decision.
The move, which was made in the closing weeks of the administration of President George W. Bush, came after months of heated internal debate about the balance of power and the role of the military in a time of crisis, participants said. Officials said the Obama administration had left the plan essentially intact.

Under the revamped structure, the White House Military Office, which reports to the office of the White House chief of staff, has assumed a more central role in setting up a temporary “shadow government” in a crisis.

And the office, a 2,300-person outfit best known for flying Air Force One, has taken on added responsibilities as the lead agent in shepherding government leaders to a secure site at Mount Weather in rural Virginia, keeping classified lists of successors and maintaining computer systems, among other operational duties. Many of these types of tasks were previously handled by civilians at other agencies, led by the Federal Emergency Management Agency........"

5) WASHINGTON TIMES, June,23,2009 :
EXCLUSIVE: U.S. attorney nominee won't ID all clients http://www.washingtontimes.com/news/2009/jun/23/attorney-nominee-wont-id-all-clients/where we learn that Paul Fishman , nominated by P.Obama to be

U.S.Attorney in New Jersey , won't ID 37 clients of him at his law partnership , amazing,eh ?

and what about the 44 indicted corrupt figures in New Jersey? why the National Media is silent on this when at least 5 were involved in a Money laundering ring ? why not install the guy who did that great job , Ralph Marra Jr., acting U.S. attorney for New Jersey , in the permanent job ?

How is it possible that we find out about a very well organized money laundering operation working between the USA, the EU and the Middle East and the media turns silent ? how is it possible that c-span, npr and PBS don't even mention any of it?

and these same spin outlets, when P.Clinton secures freedom to 2 journalists , Ling and Lee, and out of North Korea ,they spin these great news into a negative gossip,a negative event, and hoping to minimize the success they look for arguments and conflict , and when they fail they go back to their warmongering criminal nonsense and lies , and they talk about patriotism? who are the real terrorists ? who are the real criminals and enemies of America ? what a criminal shame the TV and cable Networks have become !

6) Financial Crisis Inquiry Commission , http://www.opencongress.org/bill/111-s386/show
http://www.politico.com/news/stories/0709/25001.html
The problem is that the neocons will insert a neocon like Zelikow , Feinberg or Porter Goss to steer the Commission into another absurd 9/11 Commission : a cover-up and a distraction : ADD INSULT TO INJURY...

7) Schools with no playgrounds but with lots of vending machines for junk foods and sugar sodas, and then the parents have to spend money buying medications, and my question to Education Secretary Duncan and which so many parents are asking : When are schools in the USA going to have simple "Solar-Wind and Batteries" demonstrators in every schools so that kids can see how these new vital technologies work and to make them part of their natural growth: the new generations must be the leaders in Solar,Wind, Wave, Batteries and Hybrid-Electric plug-ins , fuel-cells, insulation, synthetic fuels and fusion energies, and the best way to grow a leader is to start early, by watching how these natural sources charge-up their gadgets and toys, their laptops and mobile phones, make it a second nature to them, a natural process ..... why not a simple "demo" in every school?

8) In the Criminal Anthrax issue of 2001 , when medical worker Nguyen was killed by heavy-duty anthrax spores at the Manhattan Eye,Ear and Throat Hospital, http://www.nymeeth.org/ , many knew that Emergent BioSolutions (the old Bio-Port from Lansing Michigan) and their executives, like Kramer, had a lot of answers, and then ...silent ! all the key Congress members went silent, no one asked about Bio-Port, and then they presented the usual gentiles as suspects: Dr. Hatfill and Ivins, and the rest is History....until today, how could these anthrax spores get to the Manhattan Hospital ?

9) In the Internet video standards issue , Flash is "no good" for Mac or Linux, that's why we need HTML 5 right now ! we need code, tools, applications , solutions.
http://arstechnica.com/open-source/news/2009/07/decoding-the-html-5-video-codec-debate.ars http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/List_of_open_source_software_packages http://www.w3.org/

at the other hand, this story should bring some joy to many:
"Google Chrome gets skins and JavaScript performance boost.
Google has released a new Chrome beta that includes a theming engine, faster JavaScript performance, several usability improvements, and support for HTML5 video. "
http://arstechnica.com/open-source/news/2009/08/googles-chrome-gets-skins-and-javascript-performance-boost.ars

10) And dear Director Panetta,the key problem in the Health Care Reform INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY CHOICE OF SOFTWARE is WHO is in charge of the medical private data ? , and do they have their own agenda ? who is watching them ? as usual, most of Washington D.C. is clueless, so who will ?

The White House announced that David Blumenthal, MD, was going to be the new national coordinator for health information technology at HHS, and he is in favor of proprietary software while the other Harvard University group that presented the better option was in favor of open-source, and Blumenthal's partners Genachowsky at the FCC, Leibowitz at the FTC , and Summers , Emanuel ,Orszag and Axelrod among others in the White House are insisting on using proprietary Flash technology from Adobe AND OTHER PROPRIETARY SOFTWARE, instead of the free and open-source HTML 5 that the web is based on, why ? at Flash ,where some of the top executives are, what a coincidence! , friends and partners of the above, they are very happy that they will be part of the "control" of all the data of all the citizens in America, isn't wonderful? and of course they will use Oracle from Ellison as database, right ? and if anyone objects, the SEC ,under supreme general chairman Shapiro -- the SEC ex-Commissioner that was in charge while AIG ,Bear Stearns ,Merrill and Lehman were selling hundreds of billions of dollars of Credit-Default-Swaps and she never saw anything !!! -- will immediately correct EVERYONE , if you know what i mean.....it's a perfect plan , wonderful, eh ? and the gentiles in DC ? many of them looking for a belt to hold their pants and garter belts , poor darlings !

So if you put all the dots together, the same organized people that gave us the 2008 Financial Disaster, will now control not only all the private data from all the patients in the USA , they will control also the software that runs the whole national system,amazing ,eh ? and later, when the "dungaroo" hits the fan, they will blame the Democrats and the Obama-Biden Administration, perfect ,eh?

In mi opinion, the sooner the Obama -Biden ticket gets all these neocons out of the White House and their Administration, the better, just look at the "dungaroo" they did Sunday, Aug,2,2009, when Geithner and Summers had the nerve to say on the TV "spin and lie" programs that higher taxes for workers and middle class are not out of the question , so dear P.Obama : when are you going to get all these neocons out ? when are you going to put an honest gentile in the Federal Reserve and audit that "cave" ? when are you going to get Flash out and low-cost HTML 5 video in ? when are we going to get going ?

http://www.ama-assn.org/amednews/site/mobile/content/ga0803.htm

Health Care Reform is vital, let's make sure the neocons don't control our data and software , because their Health Care Financial Abuse and Disaster could make the 2008 Financial Meltdown look like a little joke, they could wreck the whole country, the greedy fools ! , let's get it right this time !

And if you want to see what some people can do with our private data, just read this :
New U.S.-Israeli Crime Ring Detailed
http://www.nytimes.com/2009/08/04/world/middleeast/04israel.html?

11) And the "Standards" issue is an old one :Until 1995, the Defense Dpt. and all its units were using a mix of wireless radios, and then Qualcomm and Jacobs went to "advice" the Military in San Diego ,Ca. , and a few years later, many of the key CDMA and wireless radios used by the U.S. military and U.S. private consumers were paying huge royalties to Qualcomm and Jacobs, they showed up with all the patents, and even when these people got some good technologies, where are the Military and consumers radios that everybody was using as open-source and free of charge in the U.S.A. ? where are they ? .... many consumers and some politicians asked the San Diego based U.S. Attorney Carol Lam about this , but then she got fired and later became the top Lawyer in Qualcomm !!! what happened ? how is that possible ? and about the wireless radios and patents investigations ? nothing.

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Carol_Lam
http://www.signonsandiego.com/news/metro/20070112-9999-1n12lam.html

Right now, America needs a massive push in advanced batteries and hybrid-electric plug-in systems as well as solar and wind energy, we are number 5 and 3 in the world in these key technologies, and that's a total disaster, and how can we spend 2 trillion dollars in the Banks and Financial Institutions (700 billion from TARP plus at least 1.3 trillion dollars between Treasury, Fed, FDIC and others) and then invest only 60 billion for all alternative energies and technologies ? and just a few billions for batteries ? we gave 180 billion dollars to A.I.G., the main promoter of this 2008 Credit-Default-Swaps Disaster, and for our own future and Energy Independence just a third of that ?

That's why also vital to Audit the Federal Reserve , http://www.ronpaul.com/on-the-issues/audit-the-federal-reserve-hr-1207/and investigate the Organic Program Federal Law, where Senator Leahy has worked so hard all these years, http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2009/08/07/AR2009080703650.html
http://leahy.senate.gov/NwsLtr/20090327news_letter.html
http://www.nal.usda.gov/afsic/pubs/ofp/ofp.shtml

.....and now for the latest part of the Big Trick , "they" are about to install new "old operators" in A.I.G .,Freddie Mac and Fannie Mae, etc., and split , cut , divide and fire-sell their assets and of course, Goldman Sachs, BlackRock,Pacific Investments,etal, will be the key players, so after taxpayers INVESTED hundreds of billions of dollars bailing out these tricks, the same old operators get to make the cut AGAIN ! , and a big one ! isn't wonderful ? a triple whammy ! and Washington D.C. still looking for a belt to hold their pants...and that's also why their stock is going up and up every day, they can smell the roses already ...while the taxpayers will smell the !
$#&XZ@#! again.

in any case http://www.ilfc.com/ must stay in USA and EU gentile hands, it cannot end up in the Middle East with our own oil-gas money !!!

At least we also got Senator Webb that worked so hard for the Post 9/11 G.I. Bill, effective August 1,2009 ... that's leadership, that's the real deal.
http://www.gibill.va.gov/
http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/G.I._Bill

So dear Director Panetta, you are right to want to move your great Agency forward, a very difficult job indeed, but we need a total cleanup, and who will make sure that the old garbage is out ?

LEW,

Home Brewed "Spark-Plug" Lightning Arrestor :
Take an old Spark-plug
1 - Gap it for 0.010" {0.25 mm}
2 - Ground the Body Attach to a Ground Rod 3 - Wrap/Attach the Antenna wire to the High Voltage Tip/Terminal.

You better option is to terminate your Longwire Antenna into a Matching Transformer that is mounted on a Ground Rod and using a Coax Cable feed-in-line from the Ground Rod to your

A Night in Tokyo

It's 0030 PDT Monday in Las Vegas when I decide to surf the shortwave frequencies. I'm what you might call a music junkie so I was in for an early morning musical treat. I happened upon a number of Japanese broadcasts that made for a pleasant evening of SWL. Given the fact that it's usually the Japanese that visit Las Vegas, I was quite happy to return the favor and immerse myself in Japan's rich culture via world band radio.

Monday 17.08.09 (0730-0900 UTC)

6060 RADIO HABANA CUBA at 0730 English, Prgm "Mailbag." OM host. F-G signal.
6145 RADIO JAPAN at 0738 Japanese, Music Prgm. Unusual in that YL played three versions of "(Talking About) The Boy From New York City." G Signal.

Attorney: FBI trained NJ blogger to incite others
Aug 18 03:51 PM US/Eastern
By KATIE NELSON
Associated Press Writer
HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) - A New Jersey blogger facing charges in two states for allegedly making threats against lawmakers and judges was trained by the FBI on how to be deliberately provocative, his attorney said Tuesday.

Hal Turner worked for the FBI from 2002 to 2007 as an "agent provocateur" and was taught by the agency "what he could say that wouldn't be crossing the line," defense attorney Michael Orozco said.

"His job was basically to publish information which would cause other parties to act in a manner which would lead to their arrest," Orozco said.

Prosecutors have acknowledged that Turner was an informant who spied on radical right-wing organizations, but the defense has said Turner was not working for the FBI when he allegedly made threats against Connecticut legislators and wrote that three federal judges in Illinois deserved to die.

"But if you compare anything that he did say when he was operating, there was no difference. No difference whatsoever," Orozco said.

Special Agent Ross Rice, a spokesman for the FBI in Chicago, said he would not comment on or even confirm Turner's relationship with the FBI.

Orozco spoke to reporters after a court hearing in Hartford on Tuesday. Turner, 47, of North Bergen, N.J., did not appear, because he is in federal custody in Illinois. His arraignment on the Connecticut charges was rescheduled to Oct. 19.

In June, Turner urged his readers to "take up arms" against Connecticut lawmakers and suggested government officials should "obey the Constitution or die," because he was angry over legislation—later withdrawn—that would have given lay members of Roman Catholic churches more control over their parish's finances.

He wrote in Internet postings the same month that the Illinois federal appeals judges "deserve to be killed" because they issued a ruling that upheld ordinances in Chicago and suburban Oak Park banning handguns. He included their photos and the room numbers of their chambers at the courthouse.

Orozco officially joined Turner's defense team in the Connecticut case on Tuesday, with approval from Superior Court Judge David Gold. Orozco said his Newark, N.J.-based firm has been representing Turner for the past five years, including during his FBI informant years.

Turner's Connecticut attorney, Matthew R. Potter, said it's too early to tell which trial will move forward first. Orozco said he plans First Amendment defenses in both cases.

Randall Samborn, a spokesman for the U.S. attorney's office in Chicago, said the office would not comment on Orozco's statements.

A bunch of chip resistors in parallel to ultimately make a T-atten.

Yebbut....
12W is a fair bit to dissipate with chip resistors (even a lot of them).
However, the question was if you could use WW resistors, not 'how to do it properly'. I presume there was a reason why this was asked! After all, we ARE talking 'amateur' radio.

A 5db T attenuator with 15 W in has the maximum dissipation in the shunt resistor at about 5 W.

The input series resistor dissipates about 4 W and the output series resistor dissipates a little over 1 W.

I see no reason to go to wirewound resistors at these power levels.

Oh, I quite agree. I wouldn't really choose to use WW myself, but I think they would work in this application. It's just that I usually try first to answer the question as asked, and, if necessary, start embellishing things from then on!

- Associated Press Writer
- HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) - A New Jersey blogger facing charges in two states
- for allegedly making threats against lawmakers and judges was trained by
- the FBI on how to be deliberately provocative, his attorney said Tuesday.
- Hal Turner worked for the FBI from 2002 to 2007 as an "agent provocateur"
- and was taught by the agency "what he could say that wouldn't be crossing
- the line," defense attorney Michael Orozco said.

D'Oh ! - The FBI using 'agent provocateurs' is two crimes :
* Violating their mandate to maintain and uphold the Law
* Inciting others to break the Law
When the FBI does this it is no better than the Communist KGB or the NAZI Gestapo.

In general I agree with that, but if I ask a question based on a shaky or incorrect premise, i.e. "special" resistors would be required for a 15 W attenuator, I'd prefer to be told my premise was foobar rather than waste my time chasing after something less than desirable.

FBI (FUMBLING BUMBLING IDIOTS!) Trained Hal Turner Incited VIOLENCE!
www.rense.com

Lets me gits back to work on my old trailer now.I has two more Ondura www.ondura.com roof panels I needs to put on there.Thirty six three inch long galvanized screws with one galvanized flat washer to each screw.I has a lot of doing and also screwing I needs to do.

Then, I will buy some pressure treated plywood from Follen wood treatment company (Follen is about five miles East, behind doggy's couch) in Jackson for the sides of my old trailer.Then, I will wait six months and I will paint that thar plywood.
I will be sooooooooo Glads when I finally gits done with my old trailer.It's a shed for my 1914 Ford Model T Runabout Roadster, is what it is.

The FCC requires no "back door". Regulation is their function.

The whole point of wirewound is that I can make a T pad with 3 5 Watt resistors.

They make "flange" attenuators but they cost a fortune in small quantities.

Just about anything you can get other than wire wound.

Mouser has metal oxide 5 W resistors for $0.49 quantity 1.

You don't really want to run them at full rating but you will likely have to parallel two to get the values you need anyway unless you have a cheap source of better than 5 W precision resistors.

You need two 14.01 Ohm resistors and one 82.24 Ohm resistor to build the attenuator.

If you parallel two 27 Ohm for 13.5 Ohm, and two 150 ohm for 75 Ohm, you wind up with an attenuation of 4.95 db and a VSWR of 1.04 for a 50 Ohm system.

Dave, that's a very strange response. Do you have a problem with me suggesting that you probably had a reason for asking if WW resistors could be used? I've already said that you will probably 'get away with it' up to 14MHz, especially if you mount the resistors as close as possible to a ground plane.

You may not realise that lot of 'engineering' is the art of 'getting away with it' (for whatever reason). For example, the reason might be economics, it might be practicality, it might be urgency, or it might be availability. The list is endless.

I'm just putting myself in the situation where someone needs to lose 5dB of RF drive, and (say) all he has immediately at hand is a selection of WW resistors. Does he try them (knowing that they are not recommended for RF work)? Or does he take advice from the experts who, without a second thought, will probably say "No way!".

The point is, do you want to try the WW resistors, knowing full well that they are not really the right thing to use, but will probably work well enough for what you want? Or do you want to do things 'correctly', knowing that what you have done will be almost perfect? You have received various bits of advice (some conflicting). It's now for you to decide what suits you best in the circumstances.

Law enforcement does this literally all the time. Ever heard of a sting?
How do you think they catch these "domestic terrorists"? They're sending in agent-provocateurs to stir things up, helping them get intelligence, "weapons", etc., then busting them.

FWIW, I think this sort of thing is at least immoral, and at worst criminal.
Law enforcement should not be in the business of creating crime in order to "stop" it.

One of the most amazing things about Walter Brennan was the way he could slide into "the irrascible old man", even when he was barely into his 20's.

Like Bert Mustin, but with a harder edge.

There is no such thing as Obama Care.

Why do you shill for giant multinational corporations? What did they ever do for you?

"Tort reform is a term propagated by companies -- such as those in the tobacco and asbestos industries -- vulnerable to legal actions seeking damages for the impacts of their products. Proponents use the term to refer to legislative measures designed to limit the ability and potential damages available to individuals who take legal actions against companies."

I know how to think. I have no resistors, period, except for the 1/4
Watt ones I use at work. Mr. Jim has pointed me in the right direction.

All "amateur" means in the context of Amateur Radio is that we do not get paid for doing our thing. It doesn't imply that we are stupid or incompetent.

I am fully cognizant of the possibility of meaningful reactance being introduced by a coil of Nichrome, and was hoping that someone who deals with passive components more regularly than I could point me in the right direction, and that has happened.

This is utter BS. There are many people out there below the poverty line who will simply not have the wherewithal to purchase anything medical, and in some cases not even adequate food or housing. This is just another plan by the politicians in BIG INSURANCE's back pocket and their lackeys (i.e. you). Screw it.

No kidding - they've condemned people to suffering, misery and death for decades. In fact, they did it me - when as a child I was covered under my Dad's Blue Cross insurance, and I got some ongoing treatment and tests for frequent severe headaches, at one point they cutoff benefits for both treatment and underlying cause. I continued to suffer, my Dad got poorer, and if I had had cancer or some other serious problem, my possible death would have been on their hands too.

Palin, Grassley, and the rest of them are arrogant, lying bastards. They're damn lucky they don't have to worry about going broke if they get a migraine. Screw 'em.

Walter Brennan was in the U.S.Army in World War One in Europe.A gas attack was the reason for his distinctive voice.
When Andy Devine was a kid, he was running with a stick.He fell down and somehow the stick got lodged in his throat.That was the reason for his distinctive voice.When Minnesota Fats (I read the book) was a kid, he was at a birthday party.A little girl's pet duck went waddling off down the street.Minnesota Fats went to retrieve the duck.The duck waddled into a billiard parlor, Minnesota Fats learned how to play billiards.

One time, about fourteen years ago, one night, I was at a juke joint on Highway 80 (the juke joint was called Shooters) less than a mile West of doggy's couch.Two wimmins in the juke joint, I got to talking to them.The next day, both of those wimmins were shacking up with me.One of them was thirty five years old and divorced, the other one had just recently turned nineteen years old, she had a body on herself to die for,,, I kid you not!

5179. Whose Medical Decisions?

There was a time when rushing a thousand-page bill through Congress so fast that no one has time to read it would have provoked public outrage. But now, this has been attempted twice in the first 6 months of a new administration.

The fact that they got away with it before, with the "stimulus" bill, may have led them to believe that they could get away with it again.

But the first bill simply spent hundreds of billions of dollars. The current "health care" bill threatens to take life-and-death decisions out of the hands of individuals and their doctors, transferring those decisions to Washington bureaucrats.

People are taking that personally-- as they should. Your life and death, and that of your loved ones, is as personal as it gets.

The mainstream media are again circling the wagons to protect Barack Obama, but this time it may not work. One of those front-page editorials disguised as a news article in the New York Times begins: "The stubborn yet false rumor that President Obama's health care proposals would create government-sponsored 'death panels' to decide which patients were worthy of living seemed to arise from nowhere in recent weeks."

Nowhere? Dr. Ezekiel Emanuel is "Special Advisor for Health Policy" for the Obama administration. That's nowhere? He is also co-author of an article on Americans' "over-utilization" of medical care in the June 18, 2008 issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association. Is that nowhere?

Dr. Emanuel's article points out that Americans do not visit doctors or go into hospitals more than people in other industrialized countries. In fact we go to both places less often than people do in those other countries, which include countries with government-controlled medical care.

As the article points out, "It is more costly care, rather than high volume, that accounts for higher expenditures in the United States."

There are more Magnetic Resonance Imaging (MRI) devices per capita in the United States, more coronary bypass operations and Americans use more new pharmaceutical drugs created within the past 5 years.

Americans also have more of what the article calls "amenities" with their medical care. "Hospital rooms in the United States offer more privacy, comfort and auxiliary services than do hospital rooms in most other countries."

In other words, it is not quantity but quality that is different-- and more expensive-- about American medical care. This is what Dr. Emanuel's "over-utilization" consists of.

At one time, it would have been none of Dr. Emanuel's business if your physician prescribed the latest medications for you, rather than the cheaper and obsolete medications they replaced. It would have been none of his business if you preferred to have a nice hospital room with "amenities" rather than being in an unsanitary ward with inadequate nursing care, as under the National Health Service in Britain.

The involvement of government gives Dr. Emanuel the leverage to condemn other Americans' choices-- and a larger involvement of government will give him the power to force both doctors and patients to change their choices.

As for a "death panel," no politician would ever use that phrase when trying to get a piece of legislation passed. "End of life" care under the "guidance" of "some independent group" sounds so much nicer-- and these are the terms President Obama used in an interview with the New York Times back on April 14th.

He said, "the chronically ill and those toward the end of their lives are accounting for potentially 80 percent of the total health care bill out there." He added: "It is very difficult to imagine the country making those decisions just through the normal political channels. That is why you have to have some independent group that can give you guidance."

But when you select people like Dr. Ezekiel Emanuel to give "independent" guidance, you have already chosen a policy through your choice of advisors, who simply provide political cover. The net result can be exactly the same as if those providing that guidance were openly called "death panels."

Whose Medical Decisions? Part II

When famed bank robber Willie Sutton was asked why he robbed banks, he said: "Because that's where the money is."

For the same reason, it is as predictable as the sunrise that medical care for the elderly will be cut back under a government-controlled medical system. Because that's where the money is.

My experience is probably not very different from that of many other people in their seventies. My medical expenses in the past year have been more than in the first 40 years of my life-- and I did not spend one night in a hospital all last year or go to an emergency room even once.

Just the ordinary medical expenses of keeping an old geezer going along in good health are high. Throw in a medical emergency or two and the costs go through the roof.

So long as my insurance company and I are paying for it, it is nobody else's business what my medical expenses are. But once the government is involved, everything is their business.

It is not just a question of what the government will pay for. The logic of their collectivist thinking-- and the actual practice in some other countries with government-controlled health care-- is that you cannot even pay for some medical treatments with your own money, if the powers that be decide that "society" cannot let its resources be used that way, or that it would not be "social justice" for some people to have medical treatments that others cannot get, just because some people "happen to have money."

The medical care stampede is about much more than medical care, important as that is. It is part of a whole mindset of many on the left who have never reconciled themselves to an economic system in which how much people can withdraw from the resources of the nation depends on how much they have contributed to those resources.

Despite the cleverness of phrases about people who "happen to have money," very few people just happen to have money. Most people earned their money by supplying other people with goods or services that those people were willing to pay for.

Since it is their own money that they have earned, these people feel free to spend it to give their 80-year-old grandmother another year or two of life, or to pay for a hip replacement operation for their mom or dad, even If some medical "ethicist" might say that the resources of "society" would be better used to allow some 20-year-old to talk over his angst with a shrink.

Barack Obama has talked about the high costs of taking care of elderly or chronically ill patients in terms of "society making those decisions." But a world in which individuals make their own trade-offs with their own money is fundamentally different from a world where third parties take those decisions out of their hands and impose their own notions of what is best for "society."

Calling these arbitrary notions "ethics" doesn't change anything, however effective it may be as political spin.

More is at stake than the outcomes of medical decisions, extremely important as those are. What is also at stake is freedom and the dignity of individuals who do not live their lives as supplicants of puffed-up power holders who are spending the money taken from them in taxes.

One of the many phony arguments for government-controlled medical care is that Americans do not have any longer life expectancy than in other countries, despite much higher medical expenditures.

This argument is phony because longevity depends on health-- and "health care" and "medical care" are not the same, no matter how many times the two are confused in the media or in politics. Health care includes things that doctor cannot do much about.

Homicide affects your longevity but there is not much that doctors can do about it when they arrive on the scene after you have been shot through the heart, except fill out the paperwork. Rates of homicide, obesity and narcotics usage are higher here than in many other countries, reducing our longevity.

But in the things that medical care can do something about-- like cancer survival rates-- the United States ranks at or near the top in the world. But that can change if we give up the real benefits of a top medical system for the visions and rhetoric of politicians.

You miss the point. If it's cheaper to lose lawsuits than it is to change their behavior, companies will just add the cost of getting sued to their prices. If you want them to stop killing people, you have to really hurt them.

I say that if a corporation wants the rights of a person then the principals of said corporation should be subject to criminal prosecution and imprisonment.

You make it sound like all people are suing to get rich. It's not nearly that simple.

Why are so proud to be a dumbass? Herding instinct? Sarah Palin's voluptuous ass? C'mon Roy, give us a reason you hate America.

The bill has yet to spend even one of those "hundreds of billions of dollars", and was not intended to spend all the money all at once.
People INVEST if they see that the investments are not being made into a DEAD economy. The equities markets have reacted quite favorably. The rest of this post is even more of a lie.

That is, of course, a much bigger lies than the opening. The ACTUAL bill is on line for all to read and many have. The rightrde lies we find below have been refuted and the liars can't find the crap they claim in the bill. Yet the lies just keep coming and being repeated.

Nice job, NYT!

Now as you rammage through the garbage below, try and find something that has anything to do with the the headline or the opening remarks. GOOD LUCK.

Yet he has not said anything about the government getting between you and your doctor or baring you from any medical procedure you would like to have done. THAT IS A FACT!

> Dr. Emanuel's article points out that Americans do not visit doctors or > go into hospitals more than people in other industrialized countries. In > fact we go to both places less often than people do in those other

THAT IS A FACT! We also end up with more serious health problems because we cannot afford to have regular check-ups and screenings and that is one of the things that is addressed in the new rules for claiming that a company is selling "health insurance". Any policy sold as "health insurance" must not require a deductible or a co-pay for WELL ACCEPTED STANDARD SCREENINGS AND ANNUAL PHYSICALS.

> As the article points out, "It is more costly care, rather than high > volume, that accounts for higher expenditures in the United States."

And a lot of that COST is due to putting off checkups and screenings due to the expense. In the long run this is creates much greater costs.

> There are more Magnetic Resonance Imaging (MRI) devices per capita in > the United States, more coronary bypass operations and Americans use > more new pharmaceutical drugs created within the past 5 years.

And this makes our system very convenient but also very expensive. While it serves the well off very well it does not serve the less well off at all. HR 3200 is an attempt to preserve convenience for the well off while making the system more accessible to the not so well off.

> Americans also have more of what the article calls "amenities" with > their medical care. "Hospital rooms in the United States offer more > privacy, comfort and auxiliary services than do hospital rooms in most

And this also increases the costs. Those costs are fine for those who can afford them, but not a good idea for those who cannot.

> In other words, it is not quantity but quality that is different-- and > more expensive-- about American medical care. This is what Dr. Emanuel's > "over-utilization" consists of.

The point is valid and has nothing to do with the headlines and the claims in the beginning of this latest lie rag. It also has nothing to do with REALITY.

And with the proposed health care reform plan that will not change. There is absolutely nothing ion HR 3200 that alters this. Yet the lies continue.

Gee, lying pig, ya thing that he can handle the load single handedly? Of Show it to us in the bill, lying pig.

So here we have a guy on government insurance called Medicare complaining about the government being involved in HIS health insurance. But he's a Republican and that is what we have learned to expect from Republicans.
And if he is not enrolled in Medicare part B then what is he whining about anyway? Why is he trying to pass off a lie? BECAUSE HE IS A REPUBLICAN AND THAT IS PART OF THE DUES YOU PAY TO BE A MEMBER!

> It is not just a question of what the government will pay for. The logic

That is not what HR 3200 does and so this crap is the usual rightrded lie.

if the powers > that be decide that "society" cannot let its resources be used that way,

This is lying filth. The health care reform package DOES NOT STOP people from buying health insurance from the same health insurance companies they have always used. The lying filth just keeps coming.

> The medical care stampede is about much more than medical care, > important as that is. It is part of a whole mindset of many on the left > who have never reconciled themselves to an economic system in which how > much people can withdraw from the resources of the nation depends on how > much they have contributed to those resources.

That is yet another lie. The current proposal doe not IN ANY WAY prevent people from drawing on their resources as much as they chose. That is why no one is proposing any sort of "single payer" system and HR 3200 is CERTAINLY NOT A SINGLE PAYER SYSTEM. But the lies just don't stop.

No, lying pig. Society has the right to limit what it, collectively, will pay, and to prohibit the sale of products that are fraudulent. And that is what is being done. Any person who wants to spend MORE of THEIR OWN MONEY can do so. The proposed system in HR 3200 nor any other bill out of any House committee would prevent people from using private insurance or their own money to do buy whatever medical care they might choose. There is NO SINGLE PAYER PROPOSAL on the table.

What is it about the word _OPTION_, in the phrase "Public Option", that you lying pigs are having a problem with. And what part of "you can keep the plan you have" is it that you feel you can lie about without being called a liar?

> Calling these arbitrary notions "ethics" doesn't change anything, > however effective it may be as political spin.

We cannot ethically expect the community to pay huge sums of money to prolong the life of people they do not know when medical science says that it should not be done. But NOTHING PREVENTS family and close friends form doing so. IT IS NOT A SINGLE PAYER SYSTEM.

> More is at stake than the outcomes of medical decisions, extremely

Make no mistake: What is actually "at stake" is the profits of the current rape artists in the medical insurance sector.

> One of the many phony arguments for government-controlled medical care

And the main problem for you, lying pig, is that no such a system is "on the table" or being discussed.

The "argument" is PHONY because there is no proposal to emulate any of the current "socialized" systems. What part of "option" is it that continues to ricochet off your rightarded brain stem?

A few articles at World Net Daily about British health system.That married Irish woman wayyyyy over yonder across the big pond,,, her dad went to Limerick,Ireland to visit some relatives friends.As soon as he got to Limerick he wound up in Dooradoyl Hospital, enlarged prostate gland which was about to burst.The surgeons at Dooradoyle couldn't understand why the Brit docs in Bognor Regis,England had told him it was ok for him to go to Ireland.
I still have the email that married Irish woman sent me years ago, all about what happened to her dad.

I want to know what is so difficult about reading a 1000 page, double spaced, single sided bill, when your kid can read 1000 pages of Harry Potter in under a week (double sided pages, in much smaller print, and single spaced). And BTW, it's their JOB to read these bills. We don't pay them to make stupid remarks on television.

Surprise, surprise, a Democrat (Gene Taylor) that is more conservative than some Republicans? I was following him today with a glimmer of positive interest?

I was impressed up to the point where he showed the true colors of liberalism or communism? Just because the government is large, does not give it the right to demand exceptional purchasing power simply because it could or may be the largest buyer in the market.

The designer of the business marketing plan may elect not to factor discounts into their selling plan, despite the traditions of other market players that choose to do so. Some market price calculations may be so complicated that a buffer is needed in order to account for anticipated, but not necessarily present negative consequences, for example factoring in the costs of equipment break downs.

You know the equipment will break down perhaps during a period of two years, and you will have to purchase new equipment, and you have to factor in a buffer. A new advertising method or manufacturing method could introduce itself into the market, and a buffer in the price could allow the factory to actually lower prices due to improvements in the processing ability of the plant to bring things to market.

Price buffers are also used for the risky business of hiring new people for expansion efforts. You could literally loose 10 or 20 thousand dollars in a week simply because you hired someone who does not show up for work on time, or has personal problems, or they destroyed equipment or merchandise through negligence.

We've got to make better connections with business leaders and career life politicians to develop more competition neutral policies?

Gene Taylor reminds me more of JFK than any politician that I have seen on tv in a while. I have not heard such screams of joy since the Beatles after his town meeting participants were informed by him that he does not support HR 3200?

Is this guy a communist? I don't get that impression, but it bugs me when I hear people go along with this assumption that business executives are just supposed to be expected to not set their own prices. You just assume that competition would force employees to form their own companies if the employer or business was just price gouging?

The people have let the congress and lawmakers be lazy fucks for ever.
Earmarks and 'special interests' are the scourge of American politics.
Hopefully understanding what is put out will be a new trend in American politics, with out politicians. To much 'nothing' from most politicans for too long. It has long been far far past the breaking point.

From your other post, I see that you are going to use metal oxide resistors. In the circumstances, that's obviously the correct decision.

But your question did not ask about what were the best resistors to use for the attenuator. It was "Can I use wirewound resistors to build an HF attenuator?" I assumed that you knew that WW would be inductive, but might have some reason for wanting to use them.

Ralph Mowery replied that the "Simple answer is no" etc. You responded with "Can the inductive reactance be cancelled with capacitors? I'm mainly concerned with 40, 30 and 20 meters" which again made me think that you wanted to use the WW, if possible. I suggested that the effects of the inductance might be reduced if you mounted the resistors hard down against a ground plane. [This is a frequently-used technique for preserving the characteristic impedance, especially at higher frequencies.]

JB then suggested "a bunch of chip resistors". I commented that you would need quite a lot of them. It was only then that I actually suggested that there might be a reason why you were asking about WW, and that the application was 'only' for amateur radio. Your response was "Fuck you". "How very strange", I thought!

Anyway, I'm glad you have got yourself sorted out. I hope - no, I know - that the attenuator will definitely work as expected, with the advantage that it will probably work way up into the VHF region.

5204. SPECIAL: How dead is this country?

Newsgroup: rec.radio.shortwave
Date: 2009-08-20 12:30:42 UTC
From: dave <dave@dave.dave>

What did Americans gain from an unaffordable war in Iraq that lasted far longer than World War II and that put into power Shii¿½ites allied with Iran?

The answer is obvious: nothing whatsoever.

What did the armaments industry gain? Billions of dollars in profits.

What about President Obama? "A corporate marketing creation," sums up the distinguished British journalist John Pilger.

Obama is the presidential candidate who promised to end the war in Iraq. He hasnï¿½t. But he has escalated the war in Afghanistan, started a new war in Pakistan, intends to repeat the Yugoslav scenario in the Caucasus, and appears determined to start a war in South America. In response to the acceptance by US puppet president of Colombia, Alvaro Uribe, of seven US military bases in Columbia, Venezuela warned South American countries that the "winds of war are beginning to blow."

Here we have the US government, totally dependent on the generosity of foreigners to finance its red ink, which extends in large quantities as far as the eye can see, completely under the thumb of the military/security complex, which will destroy us all in order to meet Wall Street share price expectations.

Why does any American care who rules Afghanistan? The country has nothing to do with us.

That's Orange County. Way weirder than Los Angeles.

There is no single bill to be read right now. As I understand it, there are are at least 3 committees, each with a different version. They have staff who are familiar with every word and nothing is hidden. They do have all day to read things.

That's way revisionist, but I am used to it. I apologize for the vulgarity.

That is not what I learned from my high school Social Studies teacher. We were taught that the House and Senate were subdivided into committees. Legislators were expected to be expertly knowledgeable only about the bills reported out of their committees, not all bills. The "READ THE BILL!" rablle rouserrs are just Legalese is a pain in the ass to read. But the representatives have staffs that "report out" the honest version in plain talk and that is what the representative must read. There is probably a group that does this for each caucus. The representatives also have at least two other jobs in addition to understanding the bills. One of these is to do all that can be done on a bill such as HR 3200 to educated the people as to the actual contents of the bill and the purpose of the bill. And the other duty is to ascertain the thus educated will of the constituents. Our current system fails in these last two important areas much more than if fails in the requirement to "read the bill".

IMHO a NON PARTISAN agency such as The Congressional Research Service should put the English encapsulation of a bill as important as HR 3200 on line for all to read. The administration should not be forced to put this encapsulation on line due to the lack of a NON PATISAN service. And this truthful encapsulation of the bill is what should be the subject of any PUBLIC debate.

The link below illustrates the concept and at present but is woefully inadequate to the required task:

http://opencrs.com/document/R40517/

Here we see a discussion of the various tax proposals that finance the extension of insurance to the lower income folks who cannot currently afford such insurance.

http://taxprof.typepad.com/taxprof_blog/2009/08/crs-tax.html

But I am of the opinion that HR 3200 is _THE_ current bill that has been reported out of the House committees and that CRS should offer a PLAIN

TALK assessment of that bill.

Why have them all vote, if they have no clue what they are voting for?
It would be suffecient to have those "expertly knowledgeable only about the bills" vote for the entire congress......

I think we see who's ignorant. We could vote on it but the few here that are "expertly knowledgeable only about" your infinite stupidity need read your posts to determine that.

Me and a friend "stumbled" upon one (Nike) years ago and we videotaped the whole thing.

The only clue so too speak was an old military style guard shack at the entrance, but we didn't have a clue as to what the deal was with that property right away.

It was in the middle of the night and my headlights hit on what I thought were underground vents, indeed it was, and soon we would see one after the other after the other.

Later that day I did a property search and found out who owned that property and a little more digging led me to the fact that is was a Nike Missile Base. It was located in Felicity, Ohio. Pretty cool night to actually stumble onto that.

5232. OT- Secret Police

I saw something on our local news that was pretty interesting.

Here in The Nati' - - we now have a either Secret Police or a Special Police Force, I forget which way they phrased it but it was one or the other.

They spoke to one of "them" and it really felt all cloak and daggerish...lol.
They drive around Cincinnati now in unmarked white cars, he said they weren't policeman but they have all the arrest powers of the cops and more (what would 'more' mean?)<shaking my head>

Pretty interesting, I wonder what it is REALLY about. He said they aren't law enforcement but they can still arrest you.
Of course, my conspiratorial mind wondered if this was part of the "special police" that Obama & Co. were speaking of. If it is, look for them to be coming to a town by you shortly. I'll try an find a link about it on WLWT's website.

Has anyone else heard of this in your area?

Interestingly Prez Obama and his Family will be Vacationing in Martha's Vineyard, MA.

Oops but why is the US President required to stay in that area of Martha's Vineyard where 'Blacks' are allowed to have their Vacations while the White
"Liberals" have their Vacation places reserved.

Nah, I told my friend what I thought they were and he said "no there not, those are plastic."
After going back and forth after seeing one after the other he said he would prove it.

So he got out of the car and kicked it, which of course made a resounding loud sound and he said
" I think those are underground vents." Really, you think.:-) There was pretty much history on that

The representatives of the people do not need to read the legal version in order to be fully aware of what is in the bill. The American people should also have a PLAIN TALK version of the bill. The "expertly knowledgeable are on the committees that draft the bill and haggle out what is in the bill in the committees. The market up version is then ready for debate and amendment. The knowledge of what is in the version "reported out" of the committee and of all the proposed amendments are the responsibility of the caucus that will assign different staff members and House members to each such task in order to produce a more intelligible shorter version of the legalese.

The interesting part is that the House currently is composed of the legislative assembly (the committees) which actually produces proposed legislation, and the representative assembly who are to understand what is in the proposed legislation so that they may communicate with their constituency and vote on the proposed legislation. I think you are claiming that the representatives of the people should not have any voice in what the APPOINTED and ANOINTED few might decide. You MUST be a latter day Republican.

I find most of the rightarded posts to be outright lies concerning the actual proposed legislation. It isn't ignorance. It is outright lying.

OK so "End-of-Life" Counseling is NOT in the

OK so Half or the Cost of Obama-Care© is NOT going to be Paid for by Reductions in Medicare

0035-0605 15275 Khz SINPO 34343, in English. Primarily news from Thailand and Asia. Bells on the hour. Transitioned to unknown language (possibly Thai?) at 0100.

Remarkably stable signal with little fading and no interference, making the signal more readable than otherwise expected. (The signal was more like a high SINPO S=2 than a solid S=3.)

Kenwood TS-570D with G5RV-Lite (about 60' in length) on roof from West coast of North America.

Ha! I "thought" about going there Fred but I had an inkling you may have wanted to add your input.

I gotta admit though, if it were legal, I'd like to have a puff, just one time. I think the last time I did that, I was close to nineteen years old, I can't even remember what it feels like.

Just remember, puff-puff-pass....I wonder how many puffs Bob takes before he passes. All in fun Bob. ;-D

Ahh...but you forget.

Harry Potter, compared to the conglomeration of politicians, has a far deeper grasp of reality and truth.

..and that is NO fairy tale.

Actually, there IS a proposal in HR 3200 to COVER such counseling if the insured person wishes to "counsel". It is not mandatory.

It didn't bother you guys when the Republicans banged the Patriot Act or TARP through Congress not only without without anybody reading either of them, but with the administration almost screaming that there simply wasn't time to do anything but pass it because Armageddon was At Hand.

I've heard both sides of it, almost to the point that I don't know what to believe. Me personally, something just doesn't sound right.

I asked my doctor about it yesterday and without pause he said
"it won't be good for the physicians but more importantly it will be bad for my patients." I don't trust much of anyone when it comes to people in any positions of power, I've seen just about everyone in my personal life abuse that power in some way or another....some just worse than others.

But I do know this much, as for my doctor, he's only been my doctor for almost two years now and I've never caught him bullcrapping me, he's always been honest with me even though at times I haven't agreed with him, he always done what was best for me. Just my take on it FWIW.

I have to ask Bob, do you happen to have a bong as part of your puffing arsenal? Any cool looking glass pipes? I've seen some pretty nice ones in my day. :-)

I have to say, the Doobie Dave is a good one,
I like it, it makes me laugh. I can just imagine posting on usenet if I was high on pot.<shaking

Never heard of the crushed ice thing but I do understand the brass fittings scenario. I remember my school pal put together a nice pipe that he had all throughout my younger years.

He had one of the three fittings (If I remember right)
....the one in the middle of the pipe. It was his "chamber" so too speak where he had that thing packed with weed.

Of course we didn't burn that, it just sat there and got all resinated and he would empty it into a big vitamin bottle, you know what I mean? He'd have that bottle packed over a years period with like 10th generation roach weed....lol...that stuff was incredible.<sigh> I can't believe I'm talking about this in RRS. :-) You and Doobie Dave are bad influences on me. Ha!

Roy, "staff" is the part the part of the machine that actually does the work. The Representative runs for office and conceives "big picture" policy, makes the speeches, collects the checks, etc., but the staff does the actual work.

Why do you hate workers?

Roy is a "Bubble Puppy". He lives in a parallel universe. He thinks Fox News is real.

I watch Fox News. It's a combination of horror and black comedy that is truly awesome.

How many civilians has 101 killed?

"Mercy" is a very beautiful aspect to Christianity. The UK's gesture won more hearts and minds in the stroke of a pen than 7 years of Shock and Awe.

They were waving Scottish flages (whatever those are) in Tripoli yesterday. And they weren't burning them.

There are not 2 sides to a fact. There is no way a lie equals "balance" against a truth.

Who really knows Dave. All I know is that they are canning MANY Cincinnati police officers because of the budget. That's all they have been talking about for the last two months. They had city hall jam packed with all the cops down there bitching about losing their jobs. They simply do not have the funds to pay them.

They're trying to convince people that these "Secret Police" have been here all along and that is just simply not the truth because I have every freq. of every type of law enforcement / Government etc.

etc. and have monitored this entire area since 1996.

Every now and then I will catch some covert/undercover comms in places/freqs where you wouldn't expect them. They're trying to make it "seem" that they are here to check on businesses etc. etc. - lol - which I am sure they are for now.
They're just trying to get the people used to the idea.....you know what I mean?

They're not being paid from the city budget because it's not there, like I said, they're canning hundreds of officers. I'm going to talk too an old acquaintance about this and see what he says, if anyone knows it will be him.

Here is a link, it's not the same piece that I originally saw, maybe it was on WCPO I don't know....but it definitely smells a little funny IMO.

Hos is it different from outside doggy's door? Recently, I had to build ANOTHER ''Don't drive on my yard Fence!'' to keep that dude next door from driving across my little strip of yard and my driveway with his big ass ugly old Oldsmobile car.Last April or May, I had to build that OTHER ''Don't drive on my yard!'' Fence.A few months ago, their garbage can turned over, some of that garbage spilled over on my yard, he BLAMED IT ON ME! They have a little dog that they have abandoned/have neglected.The little dog has to shift for (it is a female dog) herself nowadays.I saw the dog numerous times eating green pecans that have fallen off the pecan trees around here.I haven't seen those people give the little dog any food or water in weeks.I feel sorry for the dog, I PITY those ''people''!
They are DUMB ''neighbors''!

You or I cannot compare that to most people who live in trailer parks though, not in real life anyway.

Yesterday, I saw on local tv news a new Bonnie and Clyde movie will be filmed.Part of the new movie will be filmed in Natchez,Mississippi.Maybe that divorced Bell South woman who lives in Natchez will be in the movie.She used to live next door to me.She would be Perfect for that movie.I reckon I might plug in my phone tonight and call her arse about the new movie.

Maybe some of the Chicago mobsters moved to Cincinatti? Toledo recently (a few weeks ago) laid off some cops.

Just recently, here in Jackson,Mississippi, a new bunch of police officers graduated from the local Jackson police academy.One of those new cops at the graduation thingy, he asked his girlfriend to marry him.She said, Yes!

One of the Vietnamese guys (he was an old guy, we called him Papasan) who worked with us at the ammo supply point (ammo dump) at Tan Son Nhut, he had a little homemade two pieces brass, or copper pipe.He would put his pipe together and put something in his pipe and he would take two or three puffs and then take his pipe apart and put it back in his pocket.One time, one of those Vietnamese guys put some baby mice in one of my pockets.

Fox is amazing, isn't it? Those guys are incapable of telling even the slightest bit of truth if it will help anyone who makes less than $500,000 per annum. They are desperate to turn back the clock to the year 1890, or possibly even antebellum times when they are at their

Oh crap! could be ATF. i hear you got a bunch of dirty cops in Cinci, just like most other big city's. Alex Jones would know.
i have spent many, many and many moments on the Beast. Cinci is one of my favorite summer stops. great place for opera and prime rib. some of the best eateries in the mid-west. and, yep,

An operating room nurse Lady (she passed away a few years ago at fifty years old, cancer) in Arlington,Texas,,, I once asked her about a little skin growth on top of one of my shoulders, I have had that ever since I was a kid.She told me she can't give out any medical advice because she could lose her License.

Take two mornings and call me in the aspirin

Why do some people think Prez Obama's
"Special Advisor for Health Policy"
Dr. Ezekiel Emanuel -is- 'On Dope or Something' ?

- This is all unadulterated nonsense, reading
- in all sorts of baloney that just ain't there.

Was Dr. Ezekiel Emanuel responsible for the 'unadulterated nonsense' of End-of-Life {Ending-Your-Life} Counseling in Obama-Care© ?

Obama-Care© full of 'all sorts of baloney that just ain't there' . . . except higher Taxes

We do not live in a direct democracy and most of us do not want to live in a direct democracy. We elect REPRESENTATIVES as our AGENTS who have a responsibility to act in our best interests. Those representatives will organize the legislative process so as to accomplish the true aim of representation. That is part of the job they have before them. We the people WANT to be informed on particular acts of legislation and this health reform legislation is one of those situations. We want the representatives and the people to know what is in any bill that would accomplish health care reform of any kind. The focus on "read" the bill is whacky just as you have indicated. The legalese is not "plain talk" and cannot be "plain talk" if it is to be supported in the courts.

Understanding what is in the bill does not require a diploma in legalese.
It requires a LEGAL staff that is true to the representative and a representative that is true to his/her constituency.

Martyn's history is to be considered checkered, at best. His listings are often exaggerated, nearly always claim to be As New, His Personal Property, Collector's Condition, and other hyperbole.

He sells 'restored' Collins gear that's often clearly not correct, even in his listings' pictures.

A lot of satisfied buyers purchase from him.

But it's not the deal gone right that you need to worry about.

And it's not the good resolutions that are noteworthy. It's how he handles the deal that goes wrong that tells the tale, and if you read his feedback, he's never at fault, the buyer is always the problem, he's always the injured and offended party.

That says more about his business than the aggregate of his listings.

Be very wary of this seller.

Have you stopped beating your wife?

The subject section (section 1233) of HR 3200 says that medicare WILL PAY FOR A CONSULTATION BETWEEN AND PERSON ON MEDICARE AND THAT PERSON'S CHOSEN PHYSICIAN CONCERNING END OF LIFE DECISIONS SUCH AS LIVING WILLS AND THE LIKE IF THE ELDERLY PERSON CHOOSES SUCH A CONSULTATION. THERE IS NO REQUIREMENT FOR ANY CONSULTATION. ONLY AN INSURANCE COVERAGE FOR IT IF THE PERSON WANTS IT.

Yet, you can't find anything in HR 3200 that actually raises taxes on people who's income is less than $250,000 except for a "punitive tax" levied against those who refuse to carry ANY insurance at all. (NO different than the government requiring people to have auto liability insurance). You will not fine _*ANY*_ limitation to Medical Treatment in HR 2300 anywhere.

YOU ARE A LYING REPUBLICAN PIG!

I can't recall all of them, but as I remember the 'B' simply sounds better than the 'C'.

I've never owned a 'C', but have operated them. I have had several 'B's, one being particularly mint. Sorry I sold it. Did have crystals for the various bands for it, and later had the FS4 synthesizer as well.

Higher taxes for all? Bullshit. Prove it.

Limited medical treatment? We already have that, and getting more limited all the time.

The quiet sun continues to baffle us. If there are no sunspots today, and I don't expect any to emerge, this will be the forty-second day in a row with no sunspots. July 10 was the last day we saw any spots. There is really no way to predict when the next sunspot will appear. If we see no sunspots through the end of the month, then nearly 80 percent of 2009 so far will have been spotless.

Unsettled to active geomagnetic conditions were predicted for August 19, with a planetary A index of 20, lowered to 15 by August 17. As seen at http://www.swpc.noaa.gov/ftpdir/indices/DGD.txt, the planetary A index rose to only 10 on August 19 and 11 on August 20. The current prediction from the NOAA Space Weather Prediction Center shows a predicted planetary A index of 5 for every day through the end of August. Geophysical Institute Prague also predicts quiet and stable geomagnetic conditions through the rest of the month.

The summer sporadic-e season appears over, or at least there were no reports this week. There is a shorter, less intense winter sporadic-e season, and December's ARRL 10 Meter Contest often benefits from that mode.

George Munsch, W5VPQ, who lives in Medina County just west of San Antonio, Texas (EL09ok) sent comments responding to Pat Dyer's (WA5IYX, who is about a dozen miles east of W5VPQ, in EL09ql) remarks about digital vs. analog television as VHF propagation indicators.

George wrote, ''I have not had the pleasure of meeting Pat Dyer, but have followed his exploits on monitoring commercial signals for many years. Some early background on TV allocations may give some perspective.

Back after WW2, Ken Bullington's 1947 smooth earth models were just about all the FCC and anyone else had to use for VHF propagation predictions. Ham reports of extended propagation were dismissed, or downplayed as rare. So the initial table of VHF-TV allocations was developed. After a few stations were finally constructed along the Gulf coast, the extent of commonplace temperature inversions and thus extended VHF propagation became horribly evident. Florida stations were often stronger than ''local'' Texas stations. So, the ''Freeze'' happened. No new VHF TV licenses were issued for several years in the 1950s until a new allocations table could be worked out. Even so, interference problems continued to July 2009. I would occasionally catch UHF openings where EVERY UHF channel (except 39) displayed a signal of some kind, and VHF interference could make the low channels unusable. In the early days of (ham) VHF-FM, one Saturday I listened to a new repeater being set up, and mobiles going out to range check. I called in from my mobile and told them they were full quieting in San Antonio. This kind of broke up their party, as they were in Ft. Walton Beach, FL.

Fast forward to DTV. I have a converter which scans the spectrum and records station information whenever it is ''off''. (Hisense DB-2010) So far, several New Orleans stations have appeared on the list. I haven't tallied the list lately, but many of the VHF and most of the UHF channels are now represented. Houston stations are regularly seen, and often in the mornings, local stations do not manage the 15 dB margin over the distant signals, and are unavailable. I thought that the locals were having transmitter problems until I fired up the spectrum analyzer. Big noise there, but the TV refuses to present a picture. Again, the FCC ignored the real world in developing the allocations table, putting too many co-channel stations in ducting range of each other. Since I have an unamplified 10 way distribution system off my antenna, I don't have quite the sensitivity that Pat does, but I still see a lot of out of area digital stations''.

Thanks, George for the fascinating comments. I tried responding to George, but unfortunately the address that his arrl.net email address forwards to is rejecting incoming email.

George refers to ''Ken Bullington's 1947 smooth earth models'', and this was an early model describing a simplified method for calculating propagation over a theoretical smooth spherical earth on frequencies above 30 MHz.

Carl Luetzelschwab, K9LA has a new propagation column in the September issue of World Radio Online. This month's column concerns making propagation predictions for the public, and whether to assume small station or big station capabilities when making the calculations. You can download it for free at http://www.worldradiomagazine.com/wro_issues/2009/0909_toc.html which shows the table of contents. Just right-click on the four sections numbered at the left to download.

In response to the mention in last week's bulletin of the K7JA and K6CTW televised victory with Morse code over text messaging, Tom Segalstad, LA4LN mentioned a similar demo that he and LA8AJA did for Norwegian television. You can watch the ''Eksperimentet'' at http://www1.nrk.no/nett-tv/klipp/222270, which is a children's science program called ''Newton''.

Tom wrote, ''We asked if the Morse receiver could copy the message by ear and reproduce it from memory, but that was not accepted. In that case we could have exchanged the Morse message much faster. Next we asked if the receiving ham could type the received message into a computer, because that would also permit a faster exchange. But that was not accepted either. The message would have to be recorded by handwriting. Then we would be limited to the speed of the receiver's handwriting, which is 30 words per minute. We objected that this was not reasonable, because the receiving SMSer would not have to write down the message, but our objection was overruled.''

''The Morse code message was transmitted at a speed of 150 characters per minute, and was completed in 45.5 seconds. The SMS message was completed in 2 minutes. The conclusion was that the Morse code exchange won with a wide margin''.

''The received message was controlled vs. the original, and was found to be identical. 'But even though the Morse code is faster, the cell phone is much smaller than the radio', says the anchor. But LA4LN replies that your use of cell phone is restricted to where you have coverage by an operator company, while amateur radio telegraphy has no limits -- even from a desolated island in the Pacific Ocean''.

''Can you flirt on Morse code?'', the female SMSer asks. 'Sure', LA4LN answers, ''On Morse code we can transmit the code 88, which means love and kisses. 88 was chosen because it pictures the cross section of kissing lips''.

I didn't know this about 88 having a graphic reference, but you can watch LA4LN explaining it with the aid of his hands, while saying something in Norwegian which sounds to me like ''octo octo''.

Who is Michael Coburn?

By his own definition Michael Coburn is not normal.

From his DeFunCted blog: 'I spend a good deal of time on the Washington State Ferry system commuting between my much smaller home on the Olympic peninsula and West Seattle. And I have invested some time [on] it conducting a sort of informal survey among the people I am able to speak with on the ferry. I tell them that I am an amateur economist (which I have been for no less than 20 years) and that I am attempting to determine what normal people (which I quickly define as those who are not preoccupied with economics) think that "The Economy" might be...' [...an enormous amount of jibberish]

"20 years" as an amateur economist and his favorite quote is by Bart Simpson -- "These are my opinions, and you can't have em"

More likly Michael Coburn is 20 years of age!

Who is the distinguished Thomas Sowell which the "abnormal" Michael 5331. Whose Medical Decisions?

Part III and IV

Amid all the controversies over medical care, no one seems to be asking a very basic question: Why does it take more than 1,000 pages of legislation to insure people who lack medical insurance?

Despite incessant repetition of the fact that millions of Americans do not have medical insurance, hardy souls who have actually read the mammoth medical care legislation being rushed through Congress have discovered all sorts of things there that have nothing whatever to do with insuring the uninsured-- and everything to do with taking medical decisions out of the hands of doctors and their patients, and transferring those decisions to Washington bureaucrats.

That's called "bait and switch" when an unscrupulous business advertises one thing and tries to sell you something else. When politicians do it, it is far more dangerous to far more people.

Deception is not an incidental aspect of this medical care legislation, but is at the very heart of it.

That such a massive change of the entire medical care system, from top to bottom, was attempted to be rushed through Congress before the August recess-- before anybody in or out of Congress had time to read it all-- should have told us from the outset that we were being played for fools.

Despite President Obama's statements that he is not advocating a "single payer" system for medical care-- which is to say, a government monopoly of power over life and death decisions-- just a few years ago, he was telling a union audience that he was in favor of a "single payer" system. At that time, he pointed out that it was unlikely that such a system could be put in place all at once, that it might take a number of years to advance, step by step, to that goal.

In other words, Barack Obama fully understood the "entering wedge" political strategy that has allowed so many government programs to start off small, and apparently innocuous-- and then grow to gigantic size and scope over the years.

If telling us that he is not for a single payer system will soothe us into going along, then it is perfectly understandable why he said it. But that is no reason for us to believe him.

As for those uninsured Americans who are supposedly the reason for all this sound and fury, there is remarkably little interest in why they are uninsured, despite the incessant repetition of the fact that they are.

The endless repetition serves a political purpose but digging into the underlying facts might undermine that purpose. Many find it sufficient to say that the uninsured cannot "afford" medical insurance. But what you can afford depends not only on how much money you have but also on what your priorities are.

Many people who are uninsured have incomes from which medical insurance premiums could readily be paid without any undue strain. But they choose to spend their money on other things. Many young people, especially, don't buy medical insurance and elderly people already have Medicare. The poor have Medicaid available, even though many do not bother to sign up for it, until they are already in the hospital--which they can do then.

Throwing numbers around about how many people are uninsured may create the impression that the uninsured cannot get medical treatment, when it fact they can get medical treatment at any hospital emergency room.

Is this ideal? Of course not. But nothing is going to be ideal, whether the current medical care legislation passes or not. The relevant question is: Are the problems created by the current situation worse than the problems that will be created by the pending legislation? That question never seems to get asked, much less answered.

No small part of our current medical care problems have been created by politicians who drive up the cost of medical insurance by mandating that insurance cover things that many people are unwilling to pay for.

Many of us are willing to pay for treatment of a sprained ankle ourselves, if we can get less expensive insurance to cover us just for catastrophic illnesses. But that is one of many decisions that politicians have taken out of our hands. There will be many more decisions taken out of our hands if Obamacare passes.

http://townhall.com/columnists/ThomasSowell/2009/08/20/whose_medical_decisions_part_iii

The serious, and sometimes chilling, provisions of the medical care legislation that President Obama has been trying to rush through Congress are important enough for all of us to stop and think, even though his political strategy from the outset has been to prevent us from having time to stop and think about it.

What we also should stop to think about is the mindset behind this legislation, which is very consistent with the mindset behind other policies of this administration, whether the particular issue is bailing out General Motors, telling banks who to lend to or appointing "czars" to tell all sorts of people in many walks of life what they can and cannot do.

The idea that government officials can play God from Washington is not a new idea, but it is an idea that is being pushed with new audacity.

What they are trying to do is to create an America very unlike the America that has existed for centuries-- the America that people have been attracted to by the millions from every part of the world, the America that many generations of Americans have fought and died for.

This is the America for which Michelle Obama expressed her resentment before it became politically expedient to keep quiet.

It is the America that Reverend Jeremiah Wright denounced in his sermons during the 20 years when Barack Obama was a parishioner, before political expediency required Obama to withdraw and distance himself.

The thing most associated with America-- freedom-- is precisely what must be destroyed if this is to be turned into a fundamentally different country to suit Obama's vision of the country and of himself. But do not expect a savvy politician like Barack Obama to express what he is doing in terms of limiting our freedom.

He may not even think of it in those terms. He may think of it in terms of promoting "social justice" or making better decisions than ordinary people are capable of making for themselves, whether about medical care or housing or many other things. Throughout history, egalitarians have been among the most arrogant people.

Obama has surrounded himself with people who also think it is their job to make other people's decisions for them. Not just Dr. Ezekiel Emanuel, his health care advisor who complains of Americans' "over-utilization" of medical care, but also Professor Cass Sunstein, who has written a whole book on how third parties should use government power to "nudge" people into making better decisions in general.

Then there are a whole array of Obama administration officials who take it as their job to pick winners and losers in the economy and tell companies how much they can and cannot pay their executives.

Just as magicians know that the secret of some of their tricks is to distract the audience, so politicians know that the secret of many political tricks is to distract the public with scapegoats.

No one is more of a political magician than Barack Obama. At the beginning of 2008, no one expected a shrewd and experienced politician like Hillary Clinton to be beaten for the Democratic nomination for President of the United States by someone completely new to the national political scene. But Obama worked his political magic, with the help of the media, which he still has.

Barack Obama's escapes from his own past words, deeds and associations have been escapes worthy of Houdini.

Like other magicians, Obama has chosen his distractions well. The insurance industry is currently his favorite distraction as scapegoats, after he has tried to demonize doctors without much success.

Saints are no more common in the insurance industry than in politics or even among paragons of virtue like economists. So there will always be horror stories, even if these are less numerous or less horrible than what is likely to happen if Obamacare gets passed into law.

Obama even gets away with saying things like having a system to "keep insurance companies honest"-- and many people may not see the painful irony in politicians trying to keep other people honest. Certainly most of the media are unlikely to point out this irony.

I've been sparring with Trucker (his previous non de plume) for years.

When he says "rightarded" he is simply saying, "you don't agree with me, and I am always right."

(More broadly, the mental acuity of anyone who uses dismissive labels of their political opponents, be it "rightards", "moonbats", or "wingnuts" is seriously in question. As soon as I see one of those words, I realize I am wasting my time.)

He's really not all that complicated. He's a statist that absolutely positively beleives that if the US government controls all aspects of his life, he will have a better life.

And for him, he's undoubtedly correct.

I advise you to plonk him, like I do. It leads to a much more pleasant USENET experience.

Never mind, if he wasn't so busy 'up thar' running a country that his predecessor managed to put firmly 'in the shit' he might deign to gaze upon you groveling 'down thar' . No doubt, again, if he had the time, he would feel genuinely sorry for you.

Americans it would seem, or at least some of them, have no qualms about trashing their country each time something crops up they don't agree with.

It would seem that men always need some idiotic fiction in the name of which they can hate one another. Once it was religion. Now it is the State.

I already addressed this pig shit in another thread and so I have delete the pig manure. The entire load of manure and my address of it is preserve in googlegroups for all to see:

The people had time to think about it and they elected representatives to do something about it. And the Representatives in the House have followed the commitments that Obama made that got him elected to office.
The result id HR 3200. The President wanted to get this done and move on to other very pressing business but that was not to be. Hence, it became necessary to spell out all the detail and that has now been done. It doesn't seem to matter. The Republicans continue to lie about what's in the bill.

Republican off topic pig shit.

HR 3200 preserves all the choices while accomplishing the tasks that need to be accomplished.

More off topic Republican swill.

The election is over. You cretins lost. Deal with it.

Which he DID.

LIE. NOTHING IN HR 3200 limits freedom other than limiting the freedom to never insure ones self and to take advantage of FREE care when it is needed. The only freedom taken away is the freedom to steal from everyone else. There is a 2.5% punitive tax that will be assessed on people who have good incomes but who are unwilling to insure themselves.
This insistence concerning MINIMAL insurance is no different than insisting that car owners must carry liability insurance. Because we do not let people die in the street. The FREE RIDERS will get medical care. And unless a punitive tax is levied we will all CONTINUE to pay for the care of the FREE RIDERS.

It has to do with ECONOMIC justice you lying sack of pig manure. It is sen that people game the system by NOT being insured. HR 3200 does not solve the problem, but it does put a major dent in it.

There is nothing wrong with educating people to make better decisions.
The concept logically assumes that they are free to make such decisions.

be a liar.

I have left the last part unmolested. Why bother. It is a merely personal attack on Obama and that is all it is. It has NOTHING to do with health care reform at all. Most of the pig shit in the post actually had nothing to do with the current proposal for health care reform. I have actually carried the water for the only "invasion" of personal decisions and that invasion is the insistence that people carry liability insurance on their bodies. There is no free lunch. When these irresponsible FREE RIDERS end up in the hospital, we all pay for it.

I'm just curious. What is it with the "Limbaugh Thing"? Every time someone speaks about something either against our Messiah or something that ticks the Democrats off, they mention the fatass or former fattie.

I had someone mention him to me in a email before. I have NEVER in the history of my life ever listened to a show of his, I think I heard the jackball once in passing on my dial, but I don't get the hardon for this guy, be it republican or democrat. Just saying.

It took me a minute to figure out what you were talking about.<grin> Indeed, one of the better amusement parks in the world and definitely one of the better rolllercoasters also.

Cinci is

No doubt about it Drifter, have you ever done the chili or coneys Cincinnati style? Superb. It's a trip, some cities I've been to look at me like I'm a nut when I ask them about it.

There a saying of some sorts, I don't know if I remember it word for word, but it goes something like this. " Whatever happens in the states, Cincinnati is always at least ten years behind."

Every person I know that has moved from Cincinnati always moves back, having said that, I won't go and try to reinvent the wheel, I'll just stay here.;-)

I'll let you guys know late tonight/ early Sunday morning, if anything else, it was nice to see my old acquaintance again. We're going to do the lunch thing and "go for a drive" as he so aptly put it and check
a few things out. Should be interesting.

I kind of have mixed feelings on the subject (pot).
I definitely don't look at people that partake as bad.

Some smoke it for different reasons, and that reason is personal for most. It is illegal though.

Actually, I don't understand why it is. There is wayyy more worse choices one could do than indulge in it.

I would be scared just because of the law enforcement angle on it. But IMO, what Bryant did was on a whole different level. Of course, that is just my opinion.

I guess Bob. Those are people IMO that don't have enough faith in their own people skills too trust themselves enough to decipher the bullcrap.

Wasn't The Baugh the one that was really heavy and then got really thin (not that it's a bad thing) and got busted for narcotics? I know it was, enough said in my book. Why would anyone trust someone that either conned or tried to con doctors just so he could get high. <shaking my head>

BCG,

Sort-of-Like : What Goes Around - Comes Around and it usually works -if- you stay in the same spot.

Had you moved to Phoenix, AZ and started to bump into people from Cincinnati, OH : Then you would be saying : Everyone I meet here comes from Cincinnati !

My main gripe with Rush, re: his illegal use of prescription drugs (Oxycontin), is that he was quite bellicose about how "drug abusers should all be locked up, and the key thrown away.", but when it came to himself being busted for it, his tune changed considerably.

A side note: It really ticked me off when, because of his abuse of Oxycontin, he lost his hearing, there were a large number of folks (mostly left wingnuts) who were all "glad to hear it, serves him right, etc. ad.
inf." I don't care for Rush's extreme politics, but feel strongly that wishing someone ill is totally inappropriate.

Ah. I didn't know about his hearing thing, yeah- I wouldn't wish that on anyone. But like you said earlier in your post, here it is he said people should be locked up (which I didn't know- doesn't surprise me) but when it was him....then it's all different..lol.

I just know this much. My former doctor (who I knew was a bullshitter) is in prison because of drugs (oxy contin).

My former dentist, who made me feel like a drug addict because I wanted ten tablets of pain medicine after dental work, was on our local news a couple weeks ago because he was pulled over for weaving. Lo and behold he was drunk and Oxy Contin and Percocet was found on his persons in baggies <shaking my head> and he had a 23 yr.old girl (who was wanted) who was also under the influence in the car with him.

That same jackball, no more than three months ago questioned me simply because I wanted a little pain medicine because he killed my mouth and gums. He said something like "now take these as prescribed, don't abuse them or give them to anyone else." I looked at him kind of shaking my head and said "man, you're making me feel like a druggie or something." He apologized and said "Gregg, you would be surprised" etc. etc.

Bwahahah- then I see his butt on the morning local news.<rolling my eyes> I'm about half tempted when he gets shipped off to the joint (and I'm keeping track of it too) to write him a little letter telling him " It makes sense now."

Then to finish my rant, a former pastor of mine is in prison for ten years for two counts of GSI. Apparently he liked to play with the pee pee's of one ten yr. old boy and another eleven yr.old boy. I always wondered why he liked to have little campouts overnight with the boys, it never smelled right to me.

What do they all including Baugh have in common?
They all were in positions of authority and used their positions for their own gratification while talking out of the side of their mouth to everyone else.
End of rant BA. ;-)

Just have to ask Brenda Ann, after he got busted did he beg forgiveness from his listeners? Why was he taking the medicine? Did he ever say?
Just curious.

Well sure. I didn't mean that "literally" every person that leaves comes back, that would be silly to say.

But I know four guys and two girls that did, but that is indeed a drop in the bucket. But everyone that "I" know has. Just saying. ;-P

I know what you're saying Bob. I kind of have a different feeling about that (crying etc.)

I would hope that the tears and asking for forgiveness are truly heartfelt, and if they are, as a christian, you have NO CHOICE (according to the word) but to forgive them.

But I definitely know what you are saying and unless you can read someones heart (which I can't) then I would have no choice. It's hard though, especially if it was done directly to you.....or it was someone you really trusted. It's happened to me (being burned)....and I would be lying if I said it was as simple as I just forgave them like it was no big deal, because that's not human nature. It just takes time and prayer I guess.

Just have to ask Brenda Ann, after he got busted
did he beg forgiveness from his listeners? Why was he taking the medicine? Did he ever say?
Just curious.

To the best of my knowledge, he never made any apologies. It's not his style.

IIRC, he was on Oxycontin for back pain. Trouble was, he was doctor shopping and had several prescriptions at the same time.

During WWI the American salute was the stiff-armed salute adopted later by the National Socialist German Workers Party (Nazis). A photograph shows French children greeting American Soliders on their way to the front in France use the American salute for Americans in World War I.
http://rexcurry.net/pledge_of_allegiance_french_children_americans_wwi.jpg

Note the source of the photo: the Committee on Public Information (CPI, the Creel Committee) in the United States. The USA was already a police state and proud of it. http://rexcurry.net/medianazi.html

The United States military also used the swastika symbol (hooked cross) in WWI, against Germany et cetera, before the symbol was adopted by the National Socialist German Workers Party and used as meshed S-letters for their "socialism".

http://rexcurry.net/45th-infantry-division-swastika-sooner-soldiers.html

The government in the United States was using the fasces symbol before it was adopted by Mussolini when he was a well-known socialist writer and leader. In 1915, fasces appeared on an Indian head gold coin in the talons of an eagle. In 1916, fasces appeared on the Mercury dime. It was propaganda to con Americans into another one of the many stupid wars that the USA's government either started or joined: WWI (the war to make the world safe for democracy, har har). That propaganda supplemented flag waving, the Pledge of Allegiance (with its stiff-armed salute) and similar silliness.
http://rexcurry.net/fascism=socialism.html

National Socialism originated in the USA.
http://rexcurry.net/swastika-national-socialism.html

45th Infantry Division and Lafayette Escadrille Americaine personnel did the Pledge of Allegiance this way.
http://members.ij.net/rex/pledge-allegiance-pledge-allegiance2.jpg

The United States government used swastika symbolism during the same period on Boeing P-12 F4b et cetera. The 45th Infantry Division influenced swastika (Hakenkreuz) symbology under Nazism http://members.ij.net/rex/swastika3swastika.jpg

For more information about all of the above see the work of the symbologist Dr. Rex Curry (author of "Pledge of Allegiance Secrets") regarding Edward Bellamy and Francis Bellamy.

Of course, WWI led to WWII and so forth, ad infinitum, ad nauseum.

hitler hated liberals, he killed over 6.5 million jews because most of them are liberal. he killed communists, socialists, trade unionists, the mentally retarded, the physical disabled, the unemployed, whom he all considered useless eaters.
liberals would not kill for your political and economic beliefs, the constitution is a liberal document, that grants you those rights.
liberals would house the retarded, help the disabled, and provide unemployment benefits for the unemployed. once again you have proven that propaganda can work on the truly stupid.

Do you have a link to your first sentence?
And of course, your second sentence is your opinion.

I wonder and I'm sure there isn't a stat/link too know, but I wonder how many people simply vote for who they feel is really the best person for their country?

I've asked that question to I know over fifty people in the last ten years, only one said she did and the other was lying. If people in this country REALLY wanted change and didn't vote strictly upon their political affiliation or the color of someones skin, this country could turn it around and right some wrongs.

Unfortunately (this group is a great example) people are so caught up into that their party is going to win (which the powers that be love) that it's almost like they don't care what is going to happen. Just my opinion.

Is www.libertypost.org ever going to make a comeback? I Hopes so!

122 three inch long galvanized screws (and also galvanized flat washers) to each one of those eight Ondura www.ondura.com corrugated roof panels I done put on my old trailer.But, I still needs to run those screws along the bottom eves on both sides on the roof up there.For doing that, I am going to use my electric drill with a philips bit.If I had tried using my electric drill on those other screws, especially wayyyyy up there at the top, it would have knocked my arse off of the roof and off of my ladder and flat on the ground, because I was literally laying on my belly on top of that trailer roof wayyyy up there.I am too young to die, too old to die too!

Well, he hasn't abandoned the idea of representative government, just the idea that there should be more than his political school of thought represented in America.

So, I wouldn't call him a fascist yet, but he's well along the road.

You got it, no dirtier than any other big city. and, i know, i'm 35 miles east of Pittsburgh. so, i know dirt. and, yes, one of the best parks in the world. hope i never get too old to ride coasters. my stomach won't let me do the chili anymore, but i love the coneys.
Cinci is a first class city. don't let anyone tell you about it's a sister city, or some such BS.

I still call ATF. before the G20 crap started up my way, we heard a lot of story's about ATF being seen around town. now with the G20 crap, it's all secret service. if you are catching unencrypted

ults, you might want to google a few sites and confirm the lingo used. or, it could be anything. hate to guess at it, mostly i turn up wrong. the people i know, who would know what is what, won't talk. the so-called patriot act has anyone above normal citizen scared to death. so, we are on our own. good luck.

No need to ask forgiveness. Like thousands, perhaps millions, he took what the doctor prescribed (and I'm not blaming doctors) and eventually developed a tolerance, and needed more, to kill the pain.

Pain is insidious, it can and will destroy your life, and one will try to escape constant pain.

Addiction is serious.

For those who castigate Rush for ranting against those who are addicted, there are those who become addicted through their own choice, and those who become addicted via 'approved' medical means.

The line between the two is a fine one, and I feel that there are ways to treat both rather than via the legal system.

I agree. The criminal justice system (or at least the prison system) is no place for addicts. For that matter, it's no place for petty thieves, check kiters, etc. There should be other ways to exact justice rather than putting these folks in a warehouse at the taxpayer's expense.

What Soviet Medicine Teaches Us by Yuri N. Maltsev

In 1918, the Soviet Union became the first country to promise universal "cradle-to-grave" healthcare coverage, to be accomplished through the complete socialization of medicine. The "right to health" became a "constitutional right" of Soviet citizens.

The proclaimed advantages of this system were that it would "reduce costs" and eliminate the "waste" that stemmed from "unnecessary duplication and parallelism" – i.e., competition.

These goals were similar to the ones declared by Mr. Obama and Ms. Pelosi – attractive and humane goals of universal coverage and low costs. What's not to like?

Advocates of socialized medicine in the United States use Soviet propaganda tactics to achieve their goals. Michael Moore is one of the most prominent and effective socialist propagandists in America. In his movie, Sicko, he unfairly and unfavorably compares health care for older patients in the United States with complex and incurable diseases to healthcare in France and Canada for young women having routine babies. Had he done the reverse – i.e., compared healthcare for young women in the United States having babies to older patients with complex and incurable diseases in socialized healthcare systems – the movie would have been the same, except that the US healthcare system would look ideal, and the UK, Canada, and France would look barbaric.

Now we in the United States are being prepared for discrimination in treatment of the elderly when it comes to healthcare. Ezekiel Emanuel is director of the Clinical Bioethics Department at the US National Institutes of Health and an architect of Obama's healthcare-reform plan. He is also the brother of Rahm Emanuel, Obama's White House chief of staff.[!]

Socialized medical systems have not served to raise general health or living standards anywhere. In fact, both analytical reasoning and empirical evidence point to the opposite conclusion. But the dismal failure of socialized medicine to raise people's health and longevity has not affected its appeal for politicians, administrators, and their intellectual servants in search of absolute power and total control.

Most countries enslaved by the Soviet empire moved out of a fully socialized system through privatization and insuring competition in the healthcare system. Others, including many European social democracies, intend to privatize the healthcare system in the long run and decentralize medical control. The private ownership of hospitals and other units is seen as a critical determining factor of the new, more efficient, and humane system.

I can either guarantee you have never taken pain meds for chronic pain for any length of time or you're just being a jerk, and I'm not saying you're a jerk all the time.....but that was a "jerkie" response.

http://blatherwatch.blogs.com/talk_radio/2006/11/scientists_ask_.html

Scientists ask: do republicans become serial killers or do serial killers become republicans?
Besides serially killing, what do Gary Ridgway, Ted Bundy, and Dennis Rader have in common?
They're all Republicans. Coincidence? New anecdotal studies give a resounding, "Perhaps."
Questions resonating within an alarmed law enforcement community: Are serial killers attracted to the Republican party? Or are the Republicans attracted to them?

In reports kept under wraps until after the recent elections, anecdotal researchers using new counterfactual technologies and fellacious methodologies have turned up startling hearsay and volumes of evidentiary spuriousness that point to both conclusions.
"The evidence is sophistic," says criminologist Dr. Edgar "Choch" Manaña, of the University of Alabama. "The speciousness of these reports is staggering."
We discovered the phenom when reading accounts of an interrogation of Green River killer Gary Ridgway by erstwhile sheriff- now 8th District Republican congressman- Dave Reichert.
Ridgway, a truck painter with an IQ of 82, who had sex with his victims after he killed them, told the sheriff he was a Republican and would support him if he ran for higher office.
While Republicans are typically in a somewhat higher IQ range than Ridgway, Reichert was flattered and his Republican handlers saw an opportunity to target new voters. Here was an inroad in the vote-rich micro-constituencies of not only psychopathic killers, but also necrophiliacs- a voting niche Republicans have been trying to crack since discovering that their revered Sen. Strom Thurmond had married three times though dead some 12 years.
Dennis Rader, Wichita's BTK (Bind, Torture, Kill) Killer was elected dog catcher on the Republican ticket and was active in the party.

Although a lowly bureacrat, he carried out his eponymous deeds with a vigor many described as entrepreneurial.

He was described by those who knew him as an authoritarian in the "daddy state" mold of a Sam Brownback, a Dr. James Dobson or a Pam Roach. He cited animal control violators without mercy; as Larry King put it: he was a "letter of the law guy." Sound familiar?

The authoritarianism of GOP libertarians or punitive religious conservatives can cause, according to the suppositious sociological community, a condition called "libertarian sociopathy." Marked by scornful, narcissistic, lack of compassion or empathy, its symptoms are obvious in people like Dori Monson, Rush Limbaugh, or Michael Savage.

An admix of power, celebrity, free markets, privatization, and no gun control, can sometimes go terribly wrong- and innocents can die.

Ted Bundy, the Tacoma boy renowned nationally for his sensational and prolific stranglings was a campaign worker for Republican Governor Dan Evans. A handsome law student, he cut quite a swath in the 1970's Olympia GOP chablis and brie scene.

While schtupping smart, young, single, Republican women during the week, he spent his quality time raping and strangling hippie chicks up in Seattle on the weekends.

It was said in Olympia that Bundy was polite, responsible, anti-union, and had the proper respect for private ownership, steel manufacturers and his Republican girlfriends. But for those to whom he felt superior, (and were potential Democrats) he repressed their votes by way of strangulation.

What was it about Republicanism that attracted Ted Bundy? Was it the sense of entitlement, ruthless independence and blind self-righteousness? Was it the laissez faire of the Republican platform gone so horribly wrong that free markets in his sick mind included the innocent necks of young women?

Speaking of entitlement, the infamous Kevin Coe, Spokane's South Hill rapist was the son of a conservative newspaper publisher, a bona fide spoiled rich kid, certified psychopath, licensed realtor, and self-described "pro-growth advocate." He and his parents were active Republicans.

As far as anyone knows, Coe never murdered anybody. His MO was brutally raping women while on his morning jog. Even after years in prison, the truly unpleasant Coe has never admitted guilt or acknowledged wrong-doing- a sociopathic pattern similar to members of or apologists for such failed and/or criminal GOP administrations such as those of Richard Nixon or George W. Bush.

Decrying "activist judges," his mother, Ruth Coe went to prison after trying to hire a hit man to murder the judge who convicted her son. She was arrested coming home from a Lincoln Day dinner.

Would Kevin Coe supported the recent "pro-growth" Initiative 933? Anecdotal researchers say yes.

We see evidence of this strange disorder as a Republican administration is pulled down and exposed. The needless war; the dismantling of social safety nets, the denigration of the judiciary, the privatization rhetoric- it all dovetails into the pathology of the Republican serial killer.

We're wondering where and when the next Bundy, or BTK will show his deadly face. When will new killers, frustrated and enflamed over liberal push-back and recent gains start a spree adding to the carnage?
We're against profiling, but screening Republicans might be a prudent first step to stopping the killing. Responsible Republicans would agree- profiling is an important law enforcement tool, surely if they have nothing to hide, they'd gladly cooperate.

According to Bret, in the rec.autos.tech newsgroper, Over the ton means 100 miles per hour.Many years ago, a guy in America pedaled his bicycle over 100 miles per hour, behind a Train.

When I had back trouble I went to a Pain Management specialist (Florida has LOTS of them). I got 3 corticosteroid injections, and 4 [ea] Norco 7.5 mg synthetic codeine pills every day, for a couple months. I tapered off the narcotics so I wouldn't get sick from sudden withdrawal.
I actually turned down an offer of more codeine from my pain management practitioner. I also got my back fixed during this time, and now take no painkillers ('cept the reefer, of course).

Labor Day is the first Monday in September.Those democraps who live catty corner across the street from doggy's couch, their Houseboy adult son will be setting up that B B Q thingy in their front yard over there.He sweeps off their sidewalk and he wipes off that glass door in front of their front door every day.That is his Job.I have actually seen him mow that yard and run that weed trimmer a few times over there.

I have recently been hearing about another very annoying noise source for the HF bands. Some of the digital TV converter boxes cause noise

5440. Listening to Shortwave without a Radio

For those of you who listen to shortwave not for the content but just because you can, move along. There is nothing for you in here.

I have spent countless hours for many years putting up with the quirks of shortwave reception. The fading, the static, the finicky broadcast schedules in all hours of the day only to hear a short half or one hour propaganda program from some far away Socialist government. Buying expensive magazines and shortwave books and spending half my time every spring and fall searching for and updating my personal shortwave broadcast schedule in the languages I understand. Only to be disappointed by the poor conditions or the boring program content. By the 1980's, about the time that President Reagan vetoed the Fairness Doctrine, domestic radio programming began to blossom and shortwave radio consumed less, and less of my time. Thank goodness.

Today, thanks to the internet (and President Reagan - God bless him.) I can listen to ANY radio station any time of day - FOR FREE!

And I do mean FREE. Let me explain.

I listen to the John Bachelor Show every weekend. Right after Sept. 11th, when his show first began airing, I remember being glued to my brand spanking new, expensive little Sony ICF-SW7600GR with its awesome sync-detector trying desperately to hear every word from WABC AM in New York City. Thank goodness nightfall came early and night time reception was improving for that fall-winter season.. Afghanistan was invaded one month later... Once springtime conditions arrived WABC was useless to receive. Ah, but what about the internet?

Well, to make a long story short, I don't enjoy falling asleep in bed with a laptop balanced on my chest. Enter the Internet Clock Radio - specifically http://aluratek.com/product_info.php?products_id=54

Finally, crystal clear reception (better than HD Radio) from any station in the world, including WABC and the BBC, that’s streaming their content onto the internet. Did I mention for FREE?

Now you may say, "It's not free because you need a broadband internet connection". Here is a little secret I have found - WiFi. This little gem of a clock radio will connect to any unsecured WiFi router in your neighborhood. You probably will find one of your neighbor's unsecured WiFi when scanning with your Internet Radio. Latch on to it and presto! FREE Wireless Internet Radio!

Of course you can also connect to the internet via your own secured WiFi or wired ethernet connection.

Did I mention the front mounted USB port...

Shortwave is doomed - http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=N_blJzon-hA

I quit weed trimmers a few years ago ever since my Toro electric weed trimmer went up in smoke.Literally, it started smoking a white smoke, just like Chief Tom Tom smoking his Peace Pipe.And those gas engine weed trimmers are wayyyyyyy to fickle.I use my old hack saw when I want to do some weed trimming, it works every time.

It's all about the profit motive. Healthcare isn't so big of an issue here in Canada; it's actually quite remarkable as to what is covered.
But if you get injured on the job trying to get Workmen's Compensation (a type of insurance) for wages lost during the recovery time (assuming you don't pay into short- or long-term disability)can be a real pain in the ass. They are all a bunch of greedy bastiches and the insurance companies could stand with undergoing a major overhaul. If anyone pays into anything they should reap the benefits of what they have essential bought and paid for with their money or the employer's money.

There are not enough Liberal Fascists to support more than one national "Progressive" (Socialist) radio network in the Free marketplace.
Nobody wants to listen to Liberal Fascists diktating Socialist "values" all day long, 24x7, telling them how to eat, shit, sleep, work and how to make love in the land of Green Socialist Utopia.

Public Radio is as boring as flies on manure - it stinks and draws Fascists.

Thank God for Presdient Reagan!.

Adolf Hitler was a Liberal Fascist. He was demonized and labeled by the Communist Party as a Rightist. Communists are anti-Rightists.
Communists are Leftists. Got that?

The Communists claimed leftism for itself (revolutionary / anti-Rightist) so it could not tolerate another politically leftist regime, i.e. NAZI = Nationalsozialistische (National Socialist) in Germany. It was the Communist Party attempt at smearing Hitler just before Hitler came to power.

Hitler was no such thing as Rightist unless you beleive in Communist propaganda lies. But most Liberal Fascists are too wee weeded up to know anything different because this fact is often conveniently omitted in todays Leftist history.

Now run along little leftist boy. Yo mama teets are calling.

i know this is a waste of time, trying to educate a drooling simpleton like you is probably impossible, here are hitlers own words of despise against liberalism. you are simply projecting, hitler was a conservative.

http://www.huppi.com/kangaroo/L-hitler.htm

Myth: Hitler was a leftist. Fact: Nearly all of Hitler's beliefs placed him on the far right. Summary Many conservatives accuse Hitler of being a leftist, on the grounds that his party was named "National Socialist." But socialism requires worker ownership and control of the means of production. In Nazi Germany, private capitalist individuals owned the means of production, and they in turn were frequently controlled by the Nazi party and state. True socialism does not advocate such economic dictatorship -- it can only be democratic. Hitler's other political beliefs place him almost always on the far right. He advocated racism over racial tolerance, eugenics over freedom of reproduction, merit over equality, competition over cooperation, power politics and militarism over pacifism, dictatorship over democracy, capitalism over Marxism, realism over idealism, nationalism over internationalism, exclusiveness over inclusiveness, common sense over theory or science, pragmatism over principle, and even held friendly relations with the Church, even though he was an atheist. Argument To most people, Hitler's beliefs belong to the extreme far right. For example, most conservatives believe in patriotism and a strong military; carry these beliefs far enough, and you arrive at Hitler's warring nationalism. This association has long been something of an embarrassment to the far right. To deflect such criticism, conservatives have recently launched a counter-attack, claiming that Hitler was a socialist, and therefore belongs to the political left, not the right. The primary basis for this claim is that Hitler was a National Socialist. The word "National" evokes the state, and the word "Socialist" openly identifies itself as such. However, there is no academic controversy over the status of this term: it was a misnomer. Misnomers are quite common in the history of political labels. Examples include the German Democratic Republic (which was neither) and Vladimir Zhirinovsky's "Liberal Democrat" party (which was also neither). The true question is not whether Hitler called his party "socialist," but whether or not it actually was. In fact, socialism has never been tried at the national level anywhere in the world. This may surprise some people -- after all, wasn't the Soviet Union socialist? The answer is no. Many nations and political parties have called themselves "socialist," but none have actually tried socialism. To understand why, we should revisit a few basic political terms. Perhaps the primary concern of any political ideology is who gets to own and control the means the production. This includes factories, farmlands, machinery, etc. Generally there have been three approaches to this question. The first was aristocracy, in which a ruling elite owned the land and productive wealth, and peasants and serfs had to obey their orders in return for their livelihood. The second is capitalism, which has disbanded the ruling elite and allows a much broader range of private individuals to own the means of production. However, this ownership is limited to those who can afford to buy productive wealth; nearly all workers are excluded. The third (and untried) approach is socialism, where everyone owns and controls the means of production, by means of the vote. As you can see, there is a spectrum here, ranging from a few people owning productive wealth at one end, to everyone owning it at the other. Socialism has been proposed in many forms. The most common is social democracy, where workers vote for their supervisors, as well as their industry representatives to regional or national congresses. Another proposed form is anarcho-socialism, where workers own companies that would operate on a free market, without any central government at all. As you can see, a central planning committee is hardly a necessary feature of socialism. The primary feature is worker ownership of production. The Soviet Union failed to qualify as socialist because it was a dictatorship over workers -- that is, a type of aristocracy, with a ruling elite in Moscow calling all the shots. Workers cannot own or control anything under a totalitarian government. In variants of socialism that call for a central government, that government is always a strong or even direct democracy… never a dictatorship. It doesn't matter if the dictator claims to be carrying out the will of the people, or calls himself a "socialist" or a "democrat." If the people themselves are not in control, then the system is, by definition, non-democratic and non-socialist. And what of Nazi Germany? The idea that workers controlled the means of production in Nazi Germany is a bitter joke. It was actually a combination of aristocracy and capitalism. Technically, private businessmen owned and controlled the means of production. The Nazi "Charter of Labor" gave employers complete power over their workers. It established the employer as the "leader of the enterprise," and read: "The leader of the enterprise makes the decisions for the employees and laborers in all matters concerning the enterprise." (1) The employer, however, was subject to the frequent orders of the ruling Nazi elite. After the Nazis took power in 1933, they quickly established a highly controlled war economy under the direction of Dr. Hjalmar Schacht. Like all war economies, it boomed, making Germany the second nation to recover fully from the Great Depression, in 1936. (The first nation was Sweden, in 1934. Following Keynesian-like policies, the Swedish government spent its way out of the Depression, proving that state economic policies can be successful without resorting to dictatorship or war.) Prior to the Nazi seizure of power in 1933, worker protests had spread all across Germany in response to the Great Depression. During his drive to power, Hitler exploited this social unrest by promising workers to strengthen their labor unions and increase their standard of living. But these were empty promises; privately, he was reassuring wealthy German businessmen that he would crack down on labor once he achieved power. Historian William Shirer describes the Nazi's dual strategy:

• "The party had to play both sides of the tracks. It had to allow [Nazi officials] Strasser, Goebbels and the crank Feder to beguile the masses with the cry that the National Socialists were truly 'socialists' and against the money barons. On the other hand, money to keep the party going had to be wheedled out of those who had an ample supply of it." (2)

Once in power, Hitler showed his true colors by promptly breaking all his promises to workers. The Nazis abolished trade unions, collective bargaining and the right to strike. An organization called the "Labor Front" replaced the old trade unions, but it was an instrument of the Nazi party and did not represent workers. According to the law that created it, "Its task is to see that every individual should be able… to perform the maximum of work." Workers would indeed greatly boost their productivity under Nazi rule. But they also became exploited. Between 1932 and 1936, workers wages fell, from 20.4 to 19.5 cents an hour for skilled labor, and from 16.1 to 13 cents an hour for unskilled labor. (3) Yet workers did not protest. This was partly because the Nazis had restored order to the economy, but an even bigger reason was that the Nazis would have cracked down on any protest.

There was no part of Nazism, therefore, that even remotely resembled socialism. But what about the political nature of Nazism in general? Did it belong to the left, or to the right? Let's take a closer look:

The politics of Nazism

The political right is popularly associated with the following principles. Of course, it goes without saying that these are generalizations, and not every person on the far right believes in every principle, or disbelieves its opposite. Most people's political beliefs are complex, and cannot be neatly pigeonholed. This is as true of Hitler as anyone. But since the far right is trying peg Hitler as a leftist, it's worth reviewing the tenets popularly associated with the right. These include:

• Individualism over collectivism.
• Racism or racial segregation over racial tolerance.
• Eugenics over freedom of reproduction.
• Merit over equality.
• Competition over cooperation.

• Power politics and militarism over pacifism.
• One-person rule or self-rule over democracy.
• Capitalism over Marxism.
• Realism over idealism.
• Nationalism over internationalism.
• Exclusiveness over inclusiveness.
• Meat-eating over vegetarianism.
• Gun ownership over gun control
• Common sense over theory or science.
• Pragmatism over principle.
• Religion over secularism.

Let's review these spectrums one by one, and see where Hitler stood in his own words. Ultimately, Hitler's views are not monolithically conservative -- on a few issues, his views are complex and difficult to label. But as you will see, the vast majority of them belong on the far right:

Individualism over collectivism.

Many conservatives argue that Hitler was a leftist because he subjugated the individual to the state. However, this characterization is wrong, for several reasons.

The first error is in assuming that this is exclusively a liberal trait. Actually, U.S. conservatives take considerable pride in being patriotic Americans, and they deeply honor those who have sacrificed their lives for their country. The Marine Corps is a classic example: as every Marine knows, all sense of individuality is obliterated in the Marines Corps, and one is subject first, foremost and always to the group.

The second error is forgetting that all human beings subscribe to individualism and collectivism. If you believe that you are personally responsible for taking care of yourself, you are an individualist. If you freely belong and contribute to any group -- say, an employing business, church, club, family, nation, or cause -- then you are a collectivist as well. Neither of these traits makes a person inherently "liberal" or "conservative," and to claim that you are an "evil socialist" because you champion a particular group is not a serious argument.

Political scientists therefore do not label people "liberal" or "conservative" on the basis of their individualism or collectivism. Much more important is how they approach their individualism and collectivism. What groups does a person belong to? How is power distributed in the group? Does it practice one-person rule, minority rule, majority rule, or self-rule? Liberals believe in majority rule. Hitler practiced one-person rule. Thus, there is no comparison.

And on that score, conservatives might feel that they are off the hook, too, because they claim to prefer self-rule to one-person rule. But their actions say otherwise. Many of the institutions that conservatives favor are really quite dictatorial: the military, the church, the patriarchal family, the business firm.

Hitler himself downplayed all groups except for the state, which he raised to supreme significance in his writings. However, he did not identify the state as most people do, as a random collection of people in artificially drawn borders. Instead, he identified the German state as its racially pure stock of German or Aryan blood. In Mein Kampf, Hitler freely and interchangeably used the terms "Aryan race," "German culture" and "folkish state." To him they were synonyms, as the quotes below show. There were citizens inside Germany (like Jews) who were not part of Hitler's state, while there were Germans outside Germany (for example, in Austria) who were. But the main point is that Hitler's political philosophy was not really based on "statism" as we know it today. It was actually based on racism -- again, a subject that hits uncomfortably closer to home for conservatives, not liberals.

As Hitler himself wrote:
"The main plank in the Nationalist Socialist program is to abolish the liberalistic concept of the individual and the Marxist concept of humanity and to substitute for them the folk community, rooted in the soil and bound together by the bond of its common blood." (4)

"The state is a means to an end. Its end lies in the preservation and advancement of a community of physically and psychically homogenous creatures. This preservation itself comprises first of all existence as a race… Thus, the highest purpose of a folkish state is concern for the preservation of those original racial elements which bestow culture and create the beauty and dignity of a higher mankind. We, as Aryans, can conceive of the state only as the living organism of a nationality which… assures the preservation of this nationality…" (5)

"The German Reich as a state must embrace all Germans and has the task, not only of assembling and preserving the most valuable stocks of basic racial elements in this people, but slowly and surely of raising them to a dominant position." (6)
And it was in the service of this racial state that Hitler encourage individuals to sacrifice themselves:
"In [the Aryan], the instinct for self-preservation has reached its noblest form, since he willingly subordinates his own ego to the life of the community and, if the hour demands it, even sacrifices it." (7)

"This state of mind, which subordinates the interests of the ego to the conservation of the community, is really the first premise for every truly human culture." (8)
Racism or racial segregation over racial tolerance.
"All the human culture, all the results of art, science, and technology that we see before us today, are almost exclusively the creative product of the Aryan." (9)

"Aryan races -- often absurdly small numerically -- subject foreign peoples, and then… develop the intellectual and organizational capacities dormant within them." (10)

"If beginning today all further Aryan influence on Japan should stop… Japan's present rise in science and technology might continue for a short time; but even in a few years the well would dry up… the present culture would freeze and sink back into the slumber from which it awakened seven decades ago by the wave of Aryan culture." (11)

"Every racial crossing leads inevitably sooner or later to the decline of the hybrid product…" (12)

"It is the function above all of the Germanic states first and foremost to call a fundamental halt to any further bastardization." (13)

"What we must fight for is to safeguard the existence and reproduction of our race and our people, the sustenance of our children and the purity of our blood…" (14)
Eugenics over freedom of reproduction
"The folkish philosophy of life must succeed in bringing about that nobler age in which men no longer are concerned with breeding dogs, horses, and cats, but in elevating man himself…" (15)

"The folkish state must make up for what everyone else today has neglected in this field. It must set race in the center of all life. It must take care to keep it pure… It must see to it that only the healthy beget children; that there is only one disgrace: despite one's own sickness and deficiencies, to bring children into the world, and one highest honor: to renounce doing so. And conversely it must be considered reprehensible: to withhold healthy children from the nation. Here the state… must put the most modern medical means in the service of this knowledge. It must declare unfit for propagation all who are in any way visibly sick or who have inherited a disease and therefore pass it on…" (16)
Merit over equality.
"The best state constitution and state form is that which, with the most unquestioned certainty, raises the best minds in the national community to leading position and leading influence. But as in economic life, the able men cannot be appointed from above, but must struggle through for themselves…" (17)

"It must not be lamented if so many men set out on the road to arrive at the same goal: the most powerful and swiftest will in this way be recognized, and will be the victor." (p. 512.)
Competition over cooperation.
"Those who want to live, let them fight, and those who do not want to fight in this world of eternal struggle do not deserve to live." (18)

"It must never be forgotten that nothing that is really great in this world has ever been achieved by coalitions, but that it has always been the success of a single victor. Coalition successes bear by the very nature of their origin the germ of future crumbling, in fact of the loss of what has already been achieved. Great, truly world-shaking revolutions of a spiritual nature are not even conceivable and realizable except as the titanic struggles of individual formations, never as enterprises of coalitions." (19)

"The idea of struggle is old as life itself, for life is only preserved because other living things perish through struggle… In this struggle, the stronger, the more able, win, while the less able, the weak, lose. Struggle is the father of all things… It is not by the principles of humanity that man lives or is able to preserve himself in the animal world, but solely by means of the most brutal struggle… If you do not fight for life, then life will never be won." (20)
Power politics and militarism over pacifism.

Allan Bullock, probably the world's greatest Hitler historian, sums up Hitler's political method in one sentence:
"Stripped of their romantic trimmings, all Hitler's ideas can be reduced to a simple claim for power which recognizes only one relationship, that of domination, and only one argument, that of force." (21)
The following quotes by Hitler portray his rather stunning contempt for pacifism:
"If the German people in its historic development had possessed that herd unity [defined here by Hitler as racial solidarity] which other peoples enjoyed, the German Reich today would doubtless be mistress of the globe. World history would have taken a different course, and no one can distinguish whether in this way we would not have obtained what so many blinded pacifists today hope to gain by begging, whining and whimpering: a peace, supported not by the palm branches of tearful, pacifist female mourners, but based on the victorious sword of a master people, putting the world into the service of a higher culture." (22)

"We must clearly recognize the fact that the recovery of the lost territories is not won through solemn appeals to the Lord or through pious hopes in a League of Nations, but only by force of arms." (23)

"In actual fact the pacifistic-humane idea is perfectly all right perhaps when the highest type of man has previously conquered and subjected the world to an extent that makes him the sole ruler of this earth… Therefore, first struggle and then perhaps pacifism." (24)
One-person rule or self-rule over democracy.
"The young [Nazi] movement is in its nature and inner organization anti-parliamentarian; that is, it rejects… a principle of majority rule in which the leader is degraded to the level of mere executant of other people's wills and opinion." (25)

"The [Nazi party] should not become a constable of public opinion, but must dominate it. It must not become a servant of the masses, but their master!" (26)

"By rejecting the authority of the individual and replacing it by the numbers of some momentary mob, the parliamentary principle of majority rule sins against the basic aristocratic principle of Nature…" (27)

"For there is one thing we must never forget… the majority can never replace the man. And no more than a hundred empty heads make one wise man will an heroic decision arise from a hundred cowards." (28)

"There must be no majority decisions, but only responsible persons, and the word 'council' must be restored to its original meaning. Surely every man will have advisers by his side, but the decision will be made by one man." (29)

"When I recognized the Jew as the leader of the Social Democracy, the scales dropped from my eyes." (30)

"The Western democracy of today is the forerunner of Marxism…" (31)

"Only a knowledge of the Jews provides the key with which to comprehend the inner, and consequently real, aims of Social Democracy." (32)
Capitalism over Marxism.

Bullock writes of Hitler's views on Marxism:
"While Hitler's attitude towards liberalism was one of contempt, towards Marxism he showed an implacable hostility… Ignoring the profound differences between Communism and Social Democracy in practice and the bitter hostility between the rival working class parties, he saw in their common ideology the embodiment of all that he detested -- mass democracy and a leveling egalitarianism as opposed to the authoritarian state and the rule of an elite; equality and friendship among peoples as opposed to racial inequality and the domination of the strong; class solidarity versus national unity; internationalism versus nationalism." (33)
As Hitler himself would write:
"The German state is gravely attacked by Marxism." (34)

"In the years 1913 and 1914, I… expressed the conviction that the question of the future of the German nation was the question of destroying Marxism." (35)

"In the economic sphere Communism is analogous to democracy in the political sphere." (36)

"The Marxists will march with democracy until they succeed in indirectly obtaining for their criminal aims the support of even the national intellectual world, destined by them for extinction." (37)

"Marxism itself systematically plans to hand the world over to the Jews." (38)

"The Jewish doctrine of Marxism rejects the aristocratic principle of Nature and replaces the eternal privilege of power and strength by the mass of numbers and their dead weight." (39)
Realism over idealism.

Hitler was hardly an "idealist" in the sense that political scientists use the term. The standard definition of an idealist is someone who believes that cooperation and peaceful coexistence can occur among peoples. A realist, however, is someone who sees the world as an unstable and dangerous place, and prepares for war, if not to deter it, then to survive it. It goes without saying that Hitler was one of the greatest realists of all time. Nonetheless, Hitler had his own twisted utopia, which he described:
"We are not simple enough, either, to believe that it could ever be possible to bring about a perfect era. But this relieves no one of the obligation to combat recognized errors, to overcome weaknesses, and strive for the ideal. Harsh reality of its own accord will create only too many limitations. For that very reason, however, man must try to serve the ultimate goal, and failures must not deter him, any more than he can abandon a system of justice merely because mistakes creep into it…" (40)

"The same boy who feels like throwing up when he hears the tirades of a pacifist 'idealist' is ready to give up his life for the ideal of his nationality." (41)
Nationalism over internationalism.
"The nationalization of our masses will succeed only when… their international poisoners are exterminated." (42)

"The severest obstacle to the present-day worker's approach to the national community lies not in the defense of his class interests, but in his international leadership and attitude which are hostile to the people and the fatherland." (43)

"Thus, the reservoir from which the young [Nazi] movement must gather its supporters will primarily be the masses of our workers. Its work will be to tear these away from the international delusion… and lead them to the national community…" (44)
Exclusiveness over inclusiveness.
"Thus men without exception wander about in the garden of Nature; they imagine that they know practically everything and yet with few exceptions pass blindly by one of the most patent principles of Nature: the inner segregation of the species of all living beings on earth." (45)

"The greatness of every mighty organization embodying an idea in this world lies in the religious fanaticism and intolerance with which, fanatically convinced of its own right, it intolerantly imposes its will against all others." (46)
Meat-eating over vegetarianism.

It may seem ridiculous to include this issue in a review of Hitler's politics, but, believe it or not, conservatives on the Internet frequently equate Hitler's vegetarianism with the vegetarianism practised by liberals concerned about the environment and the ethical treatment of animals.

Hitler's vegetarianism had nothing to do with his political beliefs. He became a vegetarian shortly after the death of his girlfriend and half-niece, Geli Raubal. Their relationship was a stormy one, and it ended in her apparent suicide. There were rumors that Hitler had arranged her murder, but Hitler would remain deeply distraught over her loss for the rest of his life. As one historian writes:
"Curiously, shortly after her death, Hitler looked with disdain on a piece of ham being served during breakfast and refused to eat it, saying it was like eating a corpse. From that moment on, he refused to eat meat." (47)

Gun ownership over gun control

Perhaps one of the pro-gun lobby's favorite arguments is that if German citizens had had the right to keep and bear arms, Hitler would have never been able to tyrannize the country. And to this effect, pro-gun advocates often quote the following:
"1935 will go down in history. For the first time, a civilized nation has full gun registration. Our streets will be safer, our police more efficient, and the world will follow our lead into the future." - Adolf Hitler
However, this quote is almost certainly a fraud. There is no reputable record of him ever making it: neither at the Nuremberg rallies, nor in any of his weekly radio addresses. Furthermore, there was no reason for him to even make such a statement; for Germany already had strict gun control as a term of surrender in the Treaty of Versailles. The Allies had wanted to make Germany as impotent as possible, and one of the ways they did that was to disarm its citizenry. Only a handful of local authorities were allowed arms at all, and the few German citizens who did possess weapons were already subject to full gun registration. Seen in this light, the above quote makes no sense whatsoever.

The Firearms Policy Journal (January 1997) writes:
"The Nazi Party did not ride to power confiscating guns. They rode to power on the inability of the Weimar Republic to confiscate their guns. They did not consolidate their power confiscating guns either. There is no historical evidence that Nazis ever went door to door in Germany confiscating guns. The Germans had a fetish about paperwork and documented everything. These searches and confiscations would have been carefully recorded. If the documents are there, let them be presented as evidence."
On April 12, 1928, five years before Hitler seized power, Germany passed the Law on Firearms and Ammunition. This law substantially tightened restrictions on gun ownership in an effort to curb street violence between Nazis and Communists. The law was ineffectual and poorly enforced. It was not until March 18, 1938 -- five years after Hitler came to power -- that the Nazis passed the German Weapons Law, their first known change in the firearm code. And this law actually relaxed restrictions on citizen firearms.

Common sense over theory or science.

Hitler was notorious for his anti-intellectualism:
"The youthful brain should in general not be burdened with things ninety-five percent of which it cannot use and hence forgets again… In many cases, the material to be learned in the various subjects is so swollen that only a fraction of it remains in the head of the individual pupil, and only a fraction of this abundance can find application, while on the other hand it is not adequate for the man working and earning his living in a definite field." (48)

"Knowledge above the average can be crammed into the average man, but it remains dead, and in the last analysis sterile knowledge. The result is a man who may be a living dictionary but nevertheless falls down miserably in all special situations and decisive moments in life." (49)

"The folkish state must not adjust its entire educational work primarily to the inoculation of mere knowledge, but to the breeding of absolutely healthy bodies. The training of mental abilities is only secondary. And here again, first place must be taken by the development of character, especially the promotion of will-power and determination, combined with the training of joy in responsibility, and only in last place comes scientific schooling." (50)

"A people of scholars, if they are physically degenerate, weak-willed and cowardly pacifists, will not storm the heavens, indeed, they will not be able to safeguard their existence on this earth." (51)
Pragmatism over principle.
"The question of the movement's inner organization is one of expediency and not of principle." (52)
Religion over secularism.

Hitler's views on religion were complex. Although ostensibly an atheist, he considered himself a cultural Catholic, and frequently evoked God, the Creator and Providence in his writings. Throughout his life he would remain an envious admirer of the Christian Church and its power over the masses. Here is but one example:
"We can learn by the example of the Catholic Church. Though its doctrinal edifice… comes into collision with exact science and research, it is none the less unwilling to sacrifice so much as one little syllable of its dogmas. It has recognized quite correctly that its power of resistance does not lie in its lesser or greater adaptation to the scientific findings of the moment, which in reality are always fluctuating, but rather in rigidly holding to dogmas once established, for it is only such dogmas which lend to the whole body the character of faith. And so it stands today more firmly than ever." (53)
Hitler also saw a useful purpose for the Church:
"The great masses of people do not consist of philosophers; precisely for the masses, [religious] faith is often the sole foundation of a moral attitude… For the political man, the value of a religion must be estimated less by its deficiencies than by the virtue of a visibly better substitute. As long as this appears to be lacking, what is present can be demolished only by fools or criminals." (54)

Hitler thus advocated freedom of religious belief. Although he would later press churches into the service of Nazism, often at the point of a gun, Hitler did not attempt to impose a state religion or mandate the basic philosophical content of German religions. As long as they did not interfere with his program, he allowed them to continue fuctioning. And this policy was foreshadowed in his writings:
"For the political leader the religious doctrines and institutions of his people must always remain inviolable; or else he has no right to be in politics…" (55)

"Political parties have nothing to do with religious problems, as long as these are not alien to the nation, undermining the morals and ethics of the race; just as religion cannot be amalgamated with the scheming of political parties." (56)

"Worst of all, however, is the devastation wrought by the misuse of religious conviction for political ends." (57)

"Therefore, let every man be active, each in his own denomination if you please, and let every man take it as his first and most sacred duty to oppose anyone who in his activity by word or deed steps outside the confines of his religious community and tries to butt into the other." (58)
Hitler was raised a Catholic, even going to school for two years at the monastery at Lambauch, Austria. As late as 24 he still called himself a Catholic, but somewhere along the way he became an atheist. It is highly doubtful that this was an intellectual decision, as a reading of his disordered thoughts in Mein Kampf will attest. The decision was most likely a pragmatic one, based on power and personal ambition. Bullock reveals an interesting anecdote showing how these considerations worked on the young Hitler. After five years of eking out a miserable existence in Vienna and four years of war, Hitler walked into his first German Worker's Party meeting:
"'Under the dim light shed by a grimy gas-lamp I could see four people sitting around a table…' As Hitler frankly acknowledges, this very obscurity was an attraction. It was only in a party which, like himself, was beginning at the bottom that he had any prospect of playing a leading part and imposing his ideas. In the established parties there was no room for him, he would be a nobody." (59)
Hitler probably realized that a frustrated artist and pipe-dreamer like himself would have no chance of achieving power in the world-wide, 2000-year old Christian Church. It was most likely for this reason that he rejected Christianity and pursued a political life instead. Yet, curiously enough, he never renounced his membership in the Catholic Church, and the Church never excommunicated him. Nor did the Church place his Mein Kampf on the Index of Prohibited Books, in spite of its knowledge of his atrocities. Later the Church would come under intense criticism for its friendly and cooperative relationship with Hitler. A brief review of this history is instructive.

In 1933, the Catholic Center Party cast its large and decisive vote in favor of Hitler's Enabling Bill. This bill essentially gave Chancellor Hitler the sweeping dictatorial powers he was seeking. Historian Guenter Lewy describes a meeting between Hitler and the German Catholic authorities shortly afterwards:
"On 26 April 1933 Hitler had a conversation with Bishop Berning and Monsignor Steinmann [the Catholic leadership in Germany]. The subject was the common fight against liberalism, Socialism and Bolshevism, discussed in the friendliest terms. In the course of the conversation Hitler said that he was only doing to the Jews what the church had done to them over the past fifteen hundred years. The prelates did not contradict him." (60)
As anyone familiar with Christian history knows, the Church has always been a primary source of anti-Semitism. Hitler's anti-Semitism therefore found a receptive audience among Catholic authorities. The Church also had an intense fear and hatred of Russian communism, and Hitler's attack on Russia was the best that could have happened. The Jesuit Michael Serafin wrote: "It cannot be denied that [Pope] Pius XII's closest advisors for some time regarded Hitler's armoured divisions as the right hand of God." (61) As Pope Pius himself would say after Germany conquered Poland: "Let us end this war between brothers and unite our forces against the common enemy of atheism" -- Russia. (62)

Once Hitler assumed power, he signed a Concordat, or agreement, with the Catholic Church. Eugenio Pacelli (the man who would eventually become Pope Pius XII) was the Vatican diplomat who drew up the Concordat, and he considered it a triumph. In return for promises which Hitler increasingly broke, the Church dissolved all Catholic organizations in Germany, including the Catholic Center Party. Bishops were to take an oath of loyalty to the Nazi regime. Clergy were to see to the pastoral care of Germany's armed forces (regardless of what those armed forces did). (63)

The Concordat eliminated all Catholic resistance to Hitler; after this, the German bishops gave Hitler their full and unqualified support. A bishops' conference at Fulda, 1933, resulted in agreement with Hitler's case for extending Lebensraum, or German territory. (64) Bishop Bornewasser told a congregation of Catholic young people at Trier: "With our heads high and with firm steps we have entered the new Reich and are ready to serve it body and soul." (65) Vicar-General Steinman greeted each Berlin mass with the shout, "Heil Hitler!" (66)

Hitler, on the other hand, kept up his attack on the Church. Nazi bands stormed into the few remaining Catholic institutions, beat up Catholic youths and arrested Catholic officials. The Vatican was dismayed, but it did not protest. (67) In some instances, it was hard to tell if the Church supported its own persecution. Hitler muzzled the independent Catholic press (about 400 daily papers in 1933) and subordinated it to Goebbels' Ministry of Propaganda and Enlightenment. Yet soon the Catholic Press was doing more than what the Nazis required of it -- for example, coordinating their Nazi propaganda to

Pacelli became the new Pope Pius XII in 1939, and he immediately improved relations with Hitler. He broke protocol by personally signing a letter in German to Hitler expressing warm hopes of friendly relations. Shortly afterwards, the Church celebrated Hitler's birthday by ringing bells, flying swastika flags from church towers and holding thanksgiving services for the Fuhrer. (69) Ringing church bells to celebrate and affirm the bishops' allegiance to the Reich would become quite common throughout the war; after the German army conquered France, the church bells rang for an entire week, and swastikas flew over the churches for ten days.

But perhaps the greatest failure of Pope Pius XII was his silence over the Holocaust, even though he knew it was in progress. Although there are many heroic stories of Catholics helping Jews survive the Holocaust, they do not include Pope Pius, the Holy See, or the German Catholic authorities. When a reporter asked Pius why he did not protest the liquidation of the Jews, the Pope answered, "Dear friend, do not forget that millions of Catholics are serving in the German armies. Am I to involve them in a conflict of conscience?" (70) As perhaps the world's greatest moral leader, he was charged with precisely that responsibility.

The history of Hitler and the Church reveals a relationship built on mutual distrust and philosophical rejection, but also shared goals, benefits, admiration, envy, friendliness, and ultimate alliance.

Myth: Hitler was a leftist. Fact: Nearly all of Hitler's beliefs placed him on the far right. Summary Many conservatives accuse Hitler of being a leftist, on the grounds that his party was named "National Socialist." But socialism requires worker ownership and control of the means of production. In Nazi Germany, private capitalist individuals owned the means of production, and they in turn were frequently controlled by the Nazi party and state. True socialism does not advocate such economic dictatorship -- it can only be democratic. Hitler's other political beliefs place him almost always on the far right. He advocated racism over racial tolerance, eugenics over freedom of reproduction, merit over equality, competition over cooperation, power politics and militarism over pacifism, dictatorship over democracy, capitalism over Marxism, realism over idealism, nationalism over internationalism, exclusiveness over inclusiveness, common sense over theory or science, pragmatism over principle, and even held friendly relations with the Church, even though he was an atheist. Argument To most people, Hitler's beliefs belong to the extreme far right. For example, most conservatives believe in patriotism and a strong military; carry these beliefs far enough, and you arrive at Hitler's warring nationalism. This association has long been something of an embarrassment to the far right. To deflect such criticism, conservatives have recently launched a counter-attack, claiming that Hitler was a socialist, and therefore belongs to the political left, not the right. The primary basis for this claim is that Hitler was a National Socialist. The word "National" evokes the state, and the word "Socialist" openly identifies itself as such. However, there is no academic controversy over the status of this term: it was a misnomer. Misnomers are quite common in the history of political labels. Examples include the German Democratic Republic (which was neither) and Vladimir Zhirinovsky's "Liberal Democrat" party (which was also neither). The true question is not whether Hitler called his party "socialist," but whether or not it actually was. In fact, socialism has never been tried at the national level anywhere in the world. This may surprise some people -- after all, wasn't the Soviet Union socialist? The answer is no. Many nations and political parties have called themselves "socialist," but none have actually tried socialism. To understand why, we should revisit a few basic political terms. Perhaps the primary concern of any political ideology is who gets to own and control the means the production. This includes factories, farmlands, machinery, etc. Generally there have been three approaches to this question. The first was aristocracy, in which a ruling elite owned the land and productive wealth, and peasants and serfs had to obey their orders in return for their livelihood. The second is capitalism, which has disbanded the ruling elite and allows a much broader range of private individuals to own the means of production. However, this ownership is limited to those who can afford to buy productive wealth; nearly all workers are excluded. The third (and untried) approach is socialism, where everyone owns and controls the means of production, by means of the vote. As you can see, there is a spectrum here, ranging from a few people owning productive wealth at one end, to everyone owning it at the other. Socialism has been proposed in many forms. The most common is social democracy, where workers vote for their supervisors, as well as their industry representatives to regional or national congresses. Another proposed form is anarcho-socialism, where workers own companies that would operate on a free market, without any central government at all. As you can see, a central planning committee is hardly a necessary feature of socialism. The primary feature is worker ownership of production. The Soviet Union failed to qualify as socialist because it was a dictatorship over workers -- that is, a type of aristocracy, with a ruling elite in Moscow calling all the shots. Workers cannot own or control anything under a totalitarian government. In variants of socialism that call for a central government, that government is always a strong or even direct democracy… never a dictatorship. It doesn't matter if the dictator claims to be carrying out the will of the people, or calls himself a "socialist" or a "democrat." If the people themselves are not in control, then the system is, by definition, non-democratic and non-socialist. And what of Nazi Germany? The idea that workers controlled the means of production in Nazi Germany is a bitter joke. It was actually a combination of aristocracy and capitalism. Technically, private businessmen owned and controlled the means of production. The Nazi "Charter of Labor" gave employers complete power over their workers. It established the employer as the "leader of the enterprise," and read: "The leader of the enterprise makes the decisions for the employees and laborers in all matters concerning the enterprise." (1) The employer, however, was subject to the frequent orders of the ruling Nazi elite. After the Nazis took power in 1933, they quickly established a highly controlled war economy under the direction of Dr. Hjalmar Schacht. Like all war economies, it boomed, making Germany the second nation to recover fully from the Great Depression, in 1936. (The first nation was Sweden, in 1934. Following Keynesian-like policies, the Swedish government spent its way out of the Depression, proving that state economic policies can be successful without resorting to dictatorship or war.) Prior to the Nazi seizure of power in 1933, worker protests had spread all across Germany in response to the Great Depression. During his drive to power, Hitler exploited this social unrest by promising workers to strengthen their labor unions and increase their standard of living. But these were empty promises; privately, he was reassuring wealthy German businessmen that he would crack down on labor once he achieved power. Historian William Shirer describes the Nazi's dual strategy:

• "The party had to play both sides of the tracks. It had to allow [Nazi officials] Strasser, Goebbels and the crank Feder to beguile the masses with the cry that the National Socialists were truly 'socialists' and against the money barons. On the other hand, money to keep the party going had to be wheedled out of those who had an ample supply of it." (2)

Once in power, Hitler showed his true colors by promptly breaking all his promises to workers. The Nazis abolished trade unions, collective bargaining and the right to strike. An organization called the "Labor Front" replaced the old trade unions, but it was an instrument of the Nazi party and did not represent workers. According to the law that created it, "Its task is to see that every individual should be able… to perform the maximum of work." Workers would indeed greatly boost their productivity under Nazi rule. But they also became exploited. Between 1932 and 1936, workers wages fell, from 20.4 to 19.5 cents an hour for skilled labor, and from 16.1 to 13 cents an hour for unskilled labor. (3) Yet workers did not protest. This was partly because the Nazis had restored order to the economy, but an even bigger reason was that the Nazis would have cracked down on any protest.

There was no part of Nazism, therefore, that even remotely resembled socialism. But what about the political nature of Nazism in general? Did it belong to the left, or to the right? Let's take a closer look:

The politics of Nazism

The political right is popularly associated with the following principles. Of course, it goes without saying that these are generalizations, and not every person on the far right believes in every principle, or disbelieves its opposite. Most people's political beliefs are complex, and cannot be neatly pigeonholed. This is as true of Hitler as anyone. But since the far right is trying peg Hitler as a leftist, it's worth reviewing the tenets popularly associated with the right. These include:

• Individualism over collectivism.
• Racism or racial segregation over racial tolerance.
• Eugenics over freedom of reproduction.
• Merit over equality.
• Competition over cooperation.

• Power politics and militarism over pacifism.
• One-person rule or self-rule over democracy.
• Capitalism over Marxism.
• Realism over idealism.
• Nationalism over internationalism.
• Exclusiveness over inclusiveness.
• Meat-eating over vegetarianism.
• Gun ownership over gun control
• Common sense over theory or science.
• Pragmatism over principle.
• Religion over secularism.

Let's review these spectrums one by one, and see where Hitler stood in his own words. Ultimately, Hitler's views are not monolithically conservative -- on a few issues, his views are complex and difficult to label. But as you will see, the vast majority of them belong on the far right:

Individualism over collectivism.

Many conservatives argue that Hitler was a leftist because he subjugated the individual to the state. However, this characterization is wrong, for several reasons.

The first error is in assuming that this is exclusively a liberal trait. Actually, U.S. conservatives take considerable pride in being patriotic Americans, and they deeply honor those who have sacrificed their lives for their country. The Marine Corps is a classic example: as every Marine knows, all sense of individuality is obliterated in the Marines Corps, and one is subject first, foremost and always to the group.

The second error is forgetting that all human beings subscribe to individualism and collectivism. If you believe that you are personally responsible for taking care of yourself, you are an individualist. If you freely belong and contribute to any group -- say, an employing business, church, club, family, nation, or cause -- then you are a collectivist as well. Neither of these traits makes a person inherently "liberal" or "conservative," and to claim that you are an "evil socialist" because you champion a particular group is not a serious argument.

Political scientists therefore do not label people "liberal" or "conservative" on the basis of their individualism or collectivism. Much more important is how they approach their individualism and collectivism. What groups does a person belong to? How is power distributed in the group? Does it practice one-person rule, minority rule, majority rule, or self-rule? Liberals believe in majority rule. Hitler practiced one-person rule. Thus, there is no comparison.

And on that score, conservatives might feel that they are off the hook, too, because they claim to prefer self-rule to one-person rule. But their actions say otherwise. Many of the institutions that conservatives favor are really quite dictatorial: the military, the church, the patriarchal family, the business firm.

Hitler himself downplayed all groups except for the state, which he raised to supreme significance in his writings. However, he did not identify the state as most people do, as a random collection of people in artificially drawn borders. Instead, he identified the German state as its racially pure stock of German or Aryan blood. In Mein Kampf, Hitler freely and interchangeably used the terms "Aryan race," "German culture" and "folkish state." To him they were synonyms, as the quotes below show. There were citizens inside Germany (like Jews) who were not part of Hitler's state, while there were Germans outside Germany (for example, in Austria) who were. But the main point is that Hitler's political philosophy was not really based on "statism" as we know it today. It was actually based on racism -- again, a subject that hits uncomfortably closer to home for conservatives, not liberals.

As Hitler himself wrote:
"The main plank in the Nationalist Socialist program is to abolish the liberalistic concept of the individual and the Marxist concept of humanity and to substitute for them the folk community, rooted in the soil and bound together by the bond of its common blood." (4)

"The state is a means to an end. Its end lies in the preservation and advancement of a community of physically and psychically homogenous creatures. This preservation itself comprises first of all existence as a race… Thus, the highest purpose of a folkish state is concern for the preservation of those original racial elements which bestow culture and create the beauty and dignity of a higher mankind. We, as Aryans, can conceive of the state only as the living organism of a nationality which… assures the preservation of this nationality…" (5)

"The German Reich as a state must embrace all Germans and has the task, not only of assembling and preserving the most valuable stocks of basic racial elements in this people, but slowly and surely of raising them to a dominant position." (6)
And it was in the service of this racial state that Hitler encourage individuals to sacrifice themselves:
"In [the Aryan], the instinct for self-preservation has reached its noblest form, since he willingly subordinates his own ego to the life of the community and, if the hour demands it, even sacrifices it." (7)

"This state of mind, which subordinates the interests of the ego to the conservation of the community, is really the first premise for every truly human culture." (8)
Racism or racial segregation over racial tolerance.
"All the human culture, all the results of art, science, and technology that we see before us today, are almost exclusively the creative product of the Aryan." (9)

"Aryan races -- often absurdly small numerically -- subject foreign peoples, and then… develop the intellectual and organizational capacities dormant within them." (10)

"If beginning today all further Aryan influence on Japan should stop… Japan's present rise in science and technology might continue for a short time; but even in a few years the well would dry up… the present culture would freeze and sink back into the slumber from which it awakened seven decades ago by the wave of Aryan culture." (11)

"Every racial crossing leads inevitably sooner or later to the decline of the hybrid product…" (12)

"It is the function above all of the Germanic states first and foremost to call a fundamental halt to any further bastardization." (13)

Eugenics over freedom of reproduction
"The folkish philosophy of life must succeed in bringing about that nobler age in which men no longer are concerned with breeding dogs, horses, and cats, but in elevating man himself…" (15)

"The folkish state must make up for what everyone else today has neglected in this field. It must set race in the center of all life. It must take care to keep it pure… It must see to it that only the healthy beget children; that there is only one disgrace: despite one's own sickness and deficiencies, to bring children into the world, and one highest honor: to renounce doing so. And conversely it must be considered reprehensible: to withhold healthy children from the nation. Here the state… must put the most modern medical means in the service of this knowledge. It must declare unfit for propagation all who are in any way visibly sick or who have inherited a disease and therefore pass it on…" (16)
Merit over equality.
"The best state constitution and state form is that which, with the most unquestioned certainty, raises the best minds in the national community to leading position and leading influence. But as in economic life, the able men cannot be appointed from above, but must struggle through for themselves…" (17)

"It must not be lamented if so many men set out on the road to arrive at the same goal: the most powerful and swiftest will in this way be recognized, and will be the victor." (p. 512.)
Competition over cooperation.
"Those who want to live, let them fight, and those who do not want to fight in this world of eternal struggle do not deserve to live." (18)

"It must never be forgotten that nothing that is really great in this world has ever been achieved by coalitions, but that it has always been the success of a single victor. Coalition successes bear by the very nature of their origin the germ of future crumbling, in fact of the loss of what has already been achieved. Great, truly world-shaking revolutions of a spiritual nature are not even conceivable and realizable except as the titanic struggles of individual formations, never as enterprises of coalitions." (19)

"The idea of struggle is old as life itself, for life is only preserved because other living things perish through struggle… In this struggle, the stronger, the more able, win, while the less able, the weak, lose. Struggle is the father of all things… It is not by the principles of humanity that man lives or is able to preserve himself in the animal world, but solely by means of the most brutal struggle… If you do not fight for life, then life will never be won." (20)
Power politics and militarism over pacifism.

Allan Bullock, probably the world's greatest Hitler historian, sums up Hitler's political method in one sentence:
"Stripped of their romantic trimmings, all Hitler's ideas can be reduced to a simple claim for power which recognizes only one relationship, that of domination, and only one argument, that of force." (21)
The following quotes by Hitler portray his rather stunning contempt for pacifism:
"If the German people in its historic development had possessed that herd unity [defined here by Hitler as racial solidarity] which other peoples enjoyed, the German Reich today would doubtless be mistress of the globe. World history would have taken a different course, and no one can distinguish whether in this way we would not have obtained what so many blinded pacifists today hope to gain by begging, whining and whimpering: a peace, supported not by the palm branches of tearful, pacifist female mourners, but based on the victorious sword of a master people, putting the world into the service of a higher culture." (22)

"We must clearly recognize the fact that the recovery of the lost territories is not won through solemn appeals to the Lord or through pious hopes in a League of Nations, but only by force of arms." (23)

"In actual fact the pacifistic-humane idea is perfectly all right perhaps when the highest type of man has previously conquered and subjected the world to an extent that makes him the sole ruler of this earth… Therefore, first struggle and then perhaps pacifism." (24)
One-person rule or self-rule over democracy.
"The young [Nazi] movement is in its nature and inner organization anti-parliamentarian; that is, it rejects… a principle of majority rule in which the leader is degraded to the level of mere executant of other people's wills and opinion." (25)

"The [Nazi party] should not become a constable of public opinion, but must dominate it. It must not become a servant of the masses, but their master!" (26)

"By rejecting the authority of the individual and replacing it by the numbers of some momentary mob, the parliamentary principle of majority rule sins against the basic aristocratic principle of Nature…" (27)

"For there is one thing we must never forget… the majority can never replace the man. And no more than a hundred empty heads make one wise man will an heroic decision arise from a hundred cowards." (28)

"There must be no majority decisions, but only responsible persons, and the word 'council' must be restored to its original meaning. Surely every man will have advisers by his side, but the decision will be made by one man." (29)

"When I recognized the Jew as the leader of the Social Democracy, the scales dropped from my eyes." (30)

"The Western democracy of today is the forerunner of Marxism…" (31)

"Only a knowledge of the Jews provides the key with which to comprehend the inner, and consequently real, aims of Social Democracy." (32)
Capitalism over Marxism.

Bullock writes of Hitler's views on Marxism:
"While Hitler's attitude towards liberalism was one of contempt, towards Marxism he showed an implacable hostility… Ignoring the profound differences between Communism and Social Democracy in practice and the bitter hostility between the rival working class parties, he saw in their common ideology the embodiment of all that he detested -- mass democracy and a leveling egalitarianism as opposed to the authoritarian state and the rule of an elite; equality and friendship among peoples as opposed to racial inequality and the domination of the strong; class solidarity versus national unity; internationalism versus nationalism." (33)
As Hitler himself would write:
"The German state is gravely attacked by Marxism." (34)

"In the years 1913 and 1914, I… expressed the conviction that the question of the future of the German nation was the question of destroying Marxism." (35)

"In the economic sphere Communism is analogous to democracy in the political sphere." (36)

"The Marxists will march with democracy until they succeed in indirectly obtaining for their criminal aims the support of even the national intellectual world, destined by them for extinction." (37)

"Marxism itself systematically plans to hand the world over to the Jews." (38)

"The Jewish doctrine of Marxism rejects the aristocratic principle of Nature and replaces the eternal privilege of power and strength by the mass of numbers and their dead weight." (39)
Realism over idealism.

Hitler was hardly an "idealist" in the sense that political scientists use the term. The standard definition of an idealist is someone who believes that cooperation and peaceful coexistence can occur among peoples. A realist, however, is someone who sees the world as an unstable and dangerous place, and prepares for war, if not to deter it, then to survive it. It goes without saying that Hitler was one of the greatest realists of all time. Nonetheless, Hitler had his own twisted utopia, which he described:
"We are not simple enough, either, to believe that it could ever be possible to bring about a perfect era. But this relieves no one of the obligation to combat recognized errors, to overcome weaknesses, and strive for the ideal. Harsh reality of its own accord will create only too many limitations. For that very reason, however, man must try to serve the ultimate goal, and failures must not deter him, any more than he can abandon a system of justice merely because mistakes creep into it…" (40)

"The same boy who feels like throwing up when he hears the tirades of a pacifist 'idealist' is ready to give up his life for the ideal of his nationality." (41)
Nationalism over internationalism.
"The nationalization of our masses will succeed only when… their international poisoners are exterminated." (42)

"The severest obstacle to the present-day worker's approach to the national community lies not in the defense of his class interests, but in his international leadership and attitude which are hostile to the people and the fatherland." (43)

"Thus, the reservoir from which the young [Nazi] movement must gather its supporters will primarily be the masses of our workers. Its work will be to tear these away from the international delusion… and lead them to the national community…" (44)
Exclusiveness over inclusiveness.
"Thus men without exception wander about in the garden of Nature; they imagine that they know practically everything and yet with few exceptions pass blindly by one of the most patent principles of Nature: the inner segregation of the species of all living beings on earth." (45)

"The greatness of every mighty organization embodying an idea in this world lies in the religious fanaticism and intolerance with which, fanatically convinced of its own right, it intolerantly imposes its will against all others." (46)
Meat-eating over vegetarianism.

It may seem ridiculous to include this issue in a review of Hitler's politics, but, believe it or not, conservatives on the Internet frequently equate Hitler's vegetarianism with the vegetarianism practised by liberals concerned about the environment and the ethical treatment of animals.

Hitler's vegetarianism had nothing to do with his political beliefs. He became a vegetarian shortly after the death of his girlfriend and half-niece, Geli Raubal. Their relationship was a stormy one, and it ended in her apparent suicide. There were rumors that Hitler had arranged her murder, but Hitler would remain deeply distraught over her loss for the rest of his life. As one historian writes:
"Curiously, shortly after her death, Hitler looked with disdain on a piece of ham being served during breakfast and refused to eat it, saying it was like eating a corpse. From that moment on, he refused to eat meat." (47)
Hitler's vegetarianism, then, was no more than a phobia, triggered by an association with his niece's death.

Gun ownership over gun control

Perhaps one of the pro-gun lobby's favorite arguments is that if German citizens had had the right to keep and bear arms, Hitler would have never been able to tyrannize the country. And to this effect, pro-gun advocates often quote the following:
"1935 will go down in history. For the first time, a civilized nation has full gun registration. Our streets will be safer, our police more efficient, and the world will follow our lead into the future." - Adolf Hitler
However, this quote is almost certainly a fraud. There is no reputable record of him ever making it: neither at the Nuremberg rallies, nor in any of his weekly radio addresses. Furthermore, there was no reason for him to even make such a statement; for Germany already had strict gun control as a term of surrender in the Treaty of Versailles. The Allies had wanted to make Germany as impotent as possible, and one of the ways they did that was to disarm its citizenry. Only a handful of local authorities were allowed arms at all, and the few German citizens who did possess weapons were already subject to full gun registration. Seen in this light, the above quote makes no sense whatsoever.

The Firearms Policy Journal (January 1997) writes:
"The Nazi Party did not ride to power confiscating guns. They rode to power on the inability of the Weimar Republic to confiscate their guns. They did not consolidate their power confiscating guns either. There is no historical evidence that Nazis ever went door to door in Germany confiscating guns. The Germans had a fetish about paperwork and documented everything. These searches and confiscations would have been carefully recorded. If the documents are there, let them be presented as evidence."
On April 12, 1928, five years before Hitler seized power, Germany passed the Law on Firearms and Ammunition. This law substantially tightened restrictions on gun ownership in an effort to curb street violence between Nazis and Communists. The law was ineffectual and poorly enforced. It was not until March 18, 1938 -- five years after Hitler came to power -- that the Nazis passed the German Weapons Law, their first known change in the firearm code. And this law actually relaxed restrictions on citizen firearms.

Common sense over theory or science.

Hitler was notorious for his anti-intellectualism:
"The youthful brain should in general not be burdened with things ninety-five percent of which it cannot use and hence forgets again… In many cases, the material to be learned in the various subjects is so swollen that only a fraction of it remains in the head of the individual pupil, and only a fraction of this abundance can find application, while on the other hand it is not adequate for the man working and earning his living in a definite field." (48)

"Knowledge above the average can be crammed into the average man, but it remains dead, and in the last analysis sterile knowledge. The result is a man who may be a living dictionary but nevertheless falls down miserably in all special situations and decisive moments in life." (49)

"The folkish state must not adjust its entire educational work primarily to the inoculation of mere knowledge, but to the breeding of absolutely healthy bodies. The training of mental abilities is only secondary. And here again, first place must be taken by the development of character, especially the promotion of will-power and determination, combined with the training of joy in responsibility, and only in last place comes scientific schooling." (50)

"A people of scholars, if they are physically degenerate, weak-willed and cowardly pacifists, will not storm the heavens, indeed, they will not be able to safeguard their existence on this earth." (51)
Pragmatism over principle.
"The question of the movement's inner organization is one of expediency and not of principle." (52)
Religion over secularism.

Hitler's views on religion were complex. Although ostensibly an atheist, he considered himself a cultural Catholic, and frequently evoked God, the Creator and Providence in his writings. Throughout his life he would remain an envious admirer of the Christian Church and its power over the masses. Here is but one example:
"We can learn by the example of the Catholic Church. Though its doctrinal edifice… comes into collision with exact science and research, it is none the less unwilling to sacrifice so much as one little syllable of its dogmas. It has recognized quite correctly that its power of resistance does not lie in its lesser or greater adaptation to the scientific findings of the moment, which in reality are always fluctuating, but rather in rigidly holding to dogmas once established, for it is only such dogmas which lend to the whole body the character of faith. And so it stands today more firmly than ever." (53)
Hitler also saw a useful purpose for the Church:
"The great masses of people do not consist of philosophers; precisely for the masses, [religious] faith is often the sole foundation of a moral attitude… For the political man, the value of a religion must be estimated less by its deficiencies than by the virtue of a visibly better substitute. As long as this appears to be lacking, what is present can be demolished only by fools or criminals." (54)

Hitler thus advocated freedom of religious belief. Although he would later press churches into the service of Nazism, often at the point of a gun, Hitler did not attempt to impose a state religion or mandate the basic philosophical content of German religions. As long as they did not interfere with his program, he allowed them to continue fuctioning. And this policy was foreshadowed in his writings:
"For the political leader the religious doctrines and institutions of his people must always remain inviolable; or else he has no right to be in politics…" (55)

"Political parties have nothing to do with religious problems, as long as these are not alien to the nation, undermining the morals and ethics of the race; just as religion cannot be amalgamated with the scheming of political parties." (56)

"Worst of all, however, is the devastation wrought by the misuse of religious conviction for political ends." (57)

"Therefore, let every man be active, each in his own denomination if you please, and let every man take it as his first and most sacred duty to oppose anyone who in his activity by word or deed steps outside the confines of his religious community and tries to butt into the other." (58)
Hitler was raised a Catholic, even going to school for two years at the monastery at Lambauch, Austria. As late as 24 he still called himself a Catholic, but somewhere along the way he became an atheist. It is highly doubtful that this was an intellectual decision, as a reading of his disordered thoughts in Mein Kampf will attest. The decision was most likely a pragmatic one, based on power and personal ambition. Bullock reveals an interesting anecdote showing how these considerations worked on the young Hitler. After five years of eking out a miserable existence in Vienna and four years of war, Hitler walked into his first German Worker's Party meeting:
"'Under the dim light shed by a grimy gas-lamp I could see four people sitting around a table…' As Hitler frankly acknowledges, this very obscurity was an attraction. It was only in a party which, like himself, was beginning at the bottom that he had any prospect of playing a leading part and imposing his ideas. In the established parties there was no room for him, he would be a nobody." (59)
Hitler probably realized that a frustrated artist and pipe-dreamer like himself would have no chance of achieving power in the world-wide, 2000-year old Christian Church. It was most likely for this reason that he rejected Christianity and pursued a political life instead. Yet, curiously enough, he never renounced his membership in the Catholic Church, and the Church never excommunicated him. Nor did the Church place his Mein Kampf on the Index of Prohibited Books, in spite of its knowledge of his atrocities. Later the Church would come under intense criticism for its friendly and cooperative relationship with Hitler. A brief review of this history is instructive.

In 1933, the Catholic Center Party cast its large and decisive vote in favor of Hitler's Enabling Bill. This bill essentially gave Chancellor Hitler the sweeping dictatorial powers he was seeking. Historian Guenter Lewy describes a meeting between Hitler and the German Catholic authorities shortly afterwards:
"On 26 April 1933 Hitler had a conversation with Bishop Berning and Monsignor Steinmann [the Catholic leadership in Germany]. The subject was the common fight against liberalism, Socialism and Bolshevism, discussed in the friendliest terms. In the course of the conversation Hitler said that he was only doing to the Jews what the church had done to them over the past fifteen hundred years. The prelates did not contradict him." (60)
As anyone familiar with Christian history knows, the Church has always been a primary source of anti-Semitism. Hitler's anti-Semitism therefore found a receptive audience among Catholic authorities. The Church also had an intense fear and hatred of Russian communism, and Hitler's attack on Russia was the best that could have happened. The Jesuit Michael Serafin wrote: "It cannot be denied that [Pope] Pius XII's closest advisors for some time regarded Hitler's armoured divisions as the right hand of God." (61) As Pope Pius himself would say after Germany conquered Poland: "Let us end this war between brothers and unite our forces against the common enemy of atheism" -- Russia. (62)

Once Hitler assumed power, he signed a Concordat, or agreement, with the Catholic Church. Eugenio Pacelli (the man who would eventually become Pope Pius XII) was the Vatican diplomat who drew up the Concordat, and he considered it a triumph. In return for promises which Hitler increasingly broke, the Church dissolved all Catholic organizations in Germany, including the Catholic Center Party. Bishops were to take an oath of loyalty to the Nazi regime. Clergy were to see to the pastoral care of Germany's armed forces (regardless of what those armed forces did). (63)

The Concordat eliminated all Catholic resistance to Hitler; after this, the German bishops gave Hitler their full and unqualified support. A bishops' conference at Fulda, 1933, resulted in agreement with Hitler's case for extending Lebensraum, or German territory. (64) Bishop Bornewasser told a congregation of Catholic young people at Trier: "With our heads high and with firm steps we have entered the new Reich and are ready to serve it body and soul." (65) Vicar-General Steinman greeted each Berlin mass with the shout, "Heil Hitler!" (66)

Hitler, on the other hand, kept up his attack on the Church. Nazi bands stormed into the few remaining Catholic institutions, beat up Catholic youths and arrested Catholic officials. The Vatican was dismayed, but it did not protest. (67) In some instances, it was hard to tell if the Church supported its own persecution. Hitler muzzled the independent Catholic press (about 400 daily papers in 1933) and subordinated it to Goebbels' Ministry of Propaganda and Enlightenment. Yet soon the Catholic Press was doing more than what the Nazis required of it -- for example, coordinating their Nazi propaganda to prepare the people for the 1940 offensive against the West. (68) Throughout the war, the Catholic press would remain one of the Third Reich's best disseminators of propaganda.

Pacelli became the new Pope Pius XII in 1939, and he immediately improved relations with Hitler. He broke protocol by personally signing a letter in German to Hitler expressing warm hopes of friendly relations. Shortly afterwards, the Church celebrated Hitler's birthday by ringing bells, flying swastika flags from church towers and holding thanksgiving services for the Fuhrer. (69) Ringing church bells to celebrate and affirm the bishops' allegiance to the Reich would become quite common throughout the war; after the German army conquered France, the church bells rang for an entire week, and swastikas flew over the churches for ten days.

But perhaps the greatest failure of Pope Pius XII was his silence over the Holocaust, even though he knew it was in progress. Although there are many heroic stories of Catholics helping Jews survive the Holocaust, they do not include Pope Pius, the Holy See, or the German Catholic authorities. When a reporter asked Pius why he did not protest the liquidation of the Jews, the Pope answered, "Dear friend, do not forget that millions of Catholics are serving in the German armies. Am I to involve them in a conflict of conscience?" (70) As perhaps the world's greatest moral leader, he was charged with precisely that responsibility.

The history of Hitler and the Church reveals a relationship built on mutual distrust and philosophical rejection, but also shared goals, benefits, admiration, envy, friendliness, and ultimate alliance.

I don't know what to think of UFO Phil. Back around 98 or 99, I guess he lurked in this group.

I didn't know who he was, he emailed me and asked me all kinds of weird questions...lol. At first I didn't know if the guy was actually being serious, but apparently he was.<shaking my head>

He's definitely "different"....not that there's anything wrong with that but I just couldn't get a good read on him, maybe it was best that I didn't. ;-)

Burr,

Don't say 'Bye' as in Goodbye
-say- "Ciao" cause it can mean both 'Hello' or 'Goodbye'

Ha! No reason for him to feel that way. If I remember right he was asking about modifying a radio to listen to aliens.

Then asked me if I could make him an antenna to listen to alien craft.<rolling my eyes> He sounded serious. I think I responded to him twice maybe and then blocked him, nothing personal, just a waste of my time.

I thought the guy really thought he was chipped etc. etc. but now I know it's just a money thing. Only in America.

Where are you listening? Here in South Florida there is nothing BUT right-wing conservative talk, both syndicated and local. I can't stand political talk, prefer to listen to things like Imus in the Morning, and any other comedy talk shows. My favorite local talk host can make an entire show about where to find the coldest milk in what grocery store! Politics=Same old shit on all radio stations.

The "Nazi" party was founded as a 'socialist' party by Gregor Strasser and his brother. It was founded on socialist beliefs, working class vs. the capitalist class. Hitler hijacked the party, got rid of the Strassers and turned the party into his own personal platform of race hatred and militarism.

Bouts fifteen minutes ago, I plugged in my phone and I phoned Follen.I says, Do y'all have pressure treated plywood? I needs to buy eight sheets of four by eight plywood three eights inch thick and two four by eight sheets of plywood three quarter inch thick.He says, Yes Sir, we ought to be able to help you out.I says, Are y'all still located over there behind that building that used to be Hardins Bakery? He says, That's exactly were we are at.I says, How about a price on that plywood? He says, The three eights inch thick plywood will run you about fifteen dollars a sheet and the three quarter inch plywood will run you about thirty eight dollars a sheet.I says, That sounds good to me, I will be over there tomorrow before noontime.

I have been there before, back in the late 1960s or early 1970s.There is a big Fish trophy and some big Deer Antlers and some other thingys mounted on the walls in their office.I bet that stuff is still there on the wall.

If you can read history, or even read, you would know that it was the German General Staff who not only bankrolled Lenin, but provided him a private train from Switzerland to Russia to start his revolutionary program. The short term gain was the Treaty of Brest-Litovsk which gave Germany about 2/3 of European Russia.

Nationalization of law enforcement
Nationalization of the Arts.
Socialized medicine.
Pro wage and price control
Pro-speech-code and anti-religious.
Pro public-works projects.

And let's not forget the "special" relationship between German eugenicists and the founder of that liberal touchstone Planned Parenthood. Margaret Sanger, patron saint of the left, spent much of her time fretting about the future of the white race. She worried about "weeds . . . overrunning the human garden."
By the way, the "weeds" she was referring were anyone with a skin hue darker than Pee Wee Hermans. She also felt the mentally challenged should be locked up in the attic. For real.

What's so good about these Internet Radio's, stand alone or from a PC, is that the radio stations are catagorized according to genre and location.
Comedy is certainly one of those catagories. Note that there are many internet only "radio" stations for a rare QSL! LOL!

Pain is a relative term and everyone has different tolerance levels.
Unless you're able to stand in that person's shoes, I'm not sure, we can pass judgement. I think he's been pretty up front about the pain

The individual becomes less important, he has no rights, they are all decided by the collective for the collective. The collective has the rights.

If you have individual rights, the collective can't discriminate against you, regardless of why they choose to deprive you of your right.

You can't have individual rights in a socialist environment because the collective could not force you into their collective.

The largest problem is that once enough individual rights have been take from the people to force them into a collective..... it is a small step later to take away a few more rights and end up with a totalitarian or Fascist leader that will rule with an iron fist.

Having individual rights keeps one man that much farther away from tyranny. The system has lasted 200 years and out lasted any Socialist system ever known.

Your Socialist Utopia is a myth.

As is a democratic utopia. The "collective", in the case of a democracy, is the majority, who decide which rights they wish to curtail for the minority by passing laws making any given thing that was previously legal, illegal.

Who was it that said "the law prohibits equally the rich and the poor from stealing bread or sleeping under bridges."?

All utopias are equally unrealizable, at least in this plane of existance.
For any such to begin to be made possible, we, as a race (the HUMAN race) would have to change our entire attitude. It will never happen, because there will always be those who choose the "it's mine, and you can't have it" attitude. This applies to leaders and followers of all political and socio-economic systems, and is why none of them can ever really work to their true potential.

REBEL RADIO GOES EASY LISTENING

Radio Rebelde was founded by Che Guevara in 1958. It has gone from bastion of youthful revolution, and playing Guerilla Commander, to playing classic American songs and Cuban pop hits. If you listened to this morning's broadcast, instead of first-hand reports on the battles against the Batista Army, you would have heard back to back songs by Nat King Cole ("That's All" and "Mona Lisa") and the Lloyd Price tune "Personality." The latter was in Spanish. Like a 45 record spinning on a turntable, Che Guevara must be spinning in his grave. Guevara died in October of 1967, thus missing Woodstock by two years.

TURKEY & THE HUNGRY HAM

Turkey & The Hungry Ham

I love SWL during the weekend for the variety of programs available, many of them music related. Particularly enjoyable listening comes from the Voice of Turkey. Their broadcasts are a pleasant blend of news, special features, and exotic Turkish music.

And the "hungry ham?" Well that comes from my side trip to SSB and amateur radio operators. The call sign of one of the hams (who hails from Colorado) just happened to be W0EAT.

OTHER MUSIC PROGRAMS I ENJOYED

Radio Bulgaria serves up a tasty mix of music in their "Folk Studio" show which includes some selections in English. Radio Exterior de Espana was more in the "musica mundo" mode. And CBC Radio One and Radio2 has a winner in their "Tonic" program (airing Saturday & Sunday) hosted by Tim Tamashiro. Listen to Diana Krall pealing you a grape, contemporary vocal artists Michael Buble and Norah Jones, and the classic Canadian born pianist Oscar Peterson. Bon appetit.

I live in, what I call, the poor side of Summerlin. I'm not sure about the Mountains interfering with DX. But I find that very few signals these days are beamed to Northwest USA. Even stations that relay from Sackville, NB Canada mostly target Eastern USA so reception is not so great here. I'm a condo dweller and can't have an outdoor antenna which makes DXing harder. As for that big hole you speak of, yeah, we have that here. It's the hole Las Vegas is in due to our slumping economy.

41 METER BAND

I'm new at monitoring this band in the morning. Besides the US religious stations all I heard was broadcasted in an oriental or Russian language. Magadan Radio was a surprise with some wonderful jazz being played. As was Radio Rossii with beautiful classical music.
I located the station on internet radio and confirmed that it was indeed R Rossii.

7385 WORLD HARVEST RADIO INTL (WHRI, SC USA) at 1222 English, OM w/

Saturday 22.08.09

The politically pompous Voice of Korea threw me for a loop this a.m. when I came upon their broadcast in French. The male announcer was actually speaking credible French and the dialog was sans the insane communist slant and military music.. At least it sounded that way but, then, I don't understand French. The only improvement would have been a female announcer.

For all you young DXers out there (Are there any?) Radio Japan has an interesting music programme called "Pop Up Japan." It's MC'd by Pack'n Mack'n. No, this is not the same someone who showed up at a recent Town Hall Meeting on health care. Actually, it is two YMs, one Pack and one Mack. Every week the show features J-Pop tunes, musical guests, unique elements of Japanese culture, and the latest Tokyo fashions. If this is not your pint of ale, let your children give a listen.

7330 VOICE OF RUSSIA at 1206 English, OM & YL reporting Nx. F signal w/ QRM fm numerous co-channels.

7315 CHINA NATIONAL RADIO (CNR-2) at 1220 Chinese, OM & YL playing pop music accompanied by QRN. W-F signal.
7280 SOUND OF HOPE (via Taiwan) at 1235 Chinese, Prgm w/ what sounded like children's voices. F signal.
7220 VOICE OF VIETNAM at 1253 Russian, YL Ancr. G signal.
6190 RADIO JAPAN s/on at 1300 Chinese, OM & YL Ancr. F signal w/ QRN.
5875 BBC (via Taiwan) at 1329 English, OM & YL reporting Nx. W-F signal.
5955 CHINA RADIO INTL at 1334 English, OM reading the Nx. W-F signal.
15260 CHINA RADIO INTL at 1342 English, OM reporting on "Chinese Lover's Day." F signal.
7300 VOICE OF RUSSIA at 1351 Chinese, OM playing pop music. F-G signal w/ better reception at this hour.
9580 RADIO AUSTRALIA at 1355 English, Prgm "Saturday Night Country." VG signal.
11710 VOICE OF KOREA (DPR) at 1407 French, OM straight talking w/o the usual pomp & ceremony. G-VG signal.
11705 RADIO JAPAN at 1410 English, "Pop Up Japan" - two YMs playing J-Pop music. VG signal.
6170 RADIO NEW ZEALAND INTL at 0415 English, YL w/ religious discussion. G signal (w/ KA33 AL ant, indoor).

Reception was rather poor this morning. Many of the signals were plagued by more noise than usual. This may have been caused by weather conditions. In Las Vegas it is partly cloudy with the possibility of thunderstorms. But that's OK, the temperature presently stands at a cool 85.

Change,

Ah now you see that the Reality of Socialism is Liberal {Do Gooder} Fascism with an Elite that believes 'They' Know what is best for the Masses.

Prez Obama 'knows' what's best for you and me.

BMUS,

Yes the 19th and 20th Century Socialist Utopia is a Myth -but- 21st Century Obama 'style' Liberal-Fascism is REAL !

That which is Not Part of the Collective is an Enemy of the Collective : Enemies of the Collective Must Be Eliminated : The Collective Must Survive Until All are One and One is All.

His patterns were that of an addict with unlimited resources. If he was truly treating pain he would not have gotten "high" on the shit, to the detriment of his health. He was weak and self-indulgent and out of control. He is deeply flawed and must admit that to the world in order to get better.

Outside Independence Hall when the Constitutional Convention of 1787 ended, Mrs. Powel of Philadelphia asked Benjamin Franklin,
"Well, Doctor, what have we got, a republic or a monarchy?"
With no hesitation whatsoever, Franklin responded,
"A republic, if you can keep it."

A group of individuals once asked me in the CIA newsgroup that same question: "Why do you hate Jesus so very much?"

I was really surprised. I don't hate Jesus at all..... But those individuals had their contorted beliefs about me (really crazy!!!)

What a blurb?

100 years ago would someone give all they owned to save their child from Polio? The point is that "if you have your health yo have got it all" you are trying to put your price on my life?

If I give up my house and cars and bank accounts to keep me alive an extra year or five years, I think I'm worth it, and besides you would tax it away with the death tax anyways. You are just trying to take my money before I can spend it to stay alive. If you can tax it away when I die then you have more control by running my health care and limiting how much goes to private industry as opposed to how much is going to government. To put it simply, if your government can get a bigger piece of the pie than the private economy then you car rule with an iron fist.

So you are trying to save my money so you can have the government use it to promote socialism rather than using it to save me for those extra years.

Chapter 1: Financing the 1933 Elections
On the cold winter weekend of January 28, 1933, Germany was officially without a government. Chancellor Kurt von Schleicher and his cabinet had resigned on Saturday afternoon, and eighty-six-year-old President von Hindenburg had not yet appointed a new chancellor. A nervous tension spread over Berlin. Everyone waited for news; most felt Germany was at an historic turning point.
Who would be the next chancellor? Hitler - the leader of the largest party, the Nazis, who pledged to destroy democracy? Papen - the aristocratic horseman who had been chancellor before Schleicher, but who had no popular following? Perhaps Schleicher again, if he could persuade the Social Democrats, the second largest political party in the country, to join him in a coalition? Governing Germany in the middle of an economic depression with nine million unemployed was not an enviable task. The country had just had three different chancellors in rapid succession. By tradition, the leader of the largest party was usually appointed chancellor. But the Nazis had been the largest party for over a year, and so far intrigues and political maneuvering had succeeded in keeping Hitler out of power. Everyone guessed what a Hitler government would mean. He had not kept his militarism, anti-Semitism, and dictatorial ambitions a secret.
Political intrigues were so numerous that weekend that no one really knew what was going on. Sensational rumors were being spread throughout the city. Some said an army coup was imminent, that Schleicher and the generals were about to abduct President von Hindenburg and declare martial law. There were also rumors of an armed Nazi uprising and a general strike by the socialist workers.
Hitler and Hermann Goering, the second most powerful man in the Nazi party, stayed up all night on Sunday, January 29, trying to figure out what Hindenburg might do. It was not until after 10 A.M. on Monday that Hitler received a summons to the president's office. Even at that point, the Nazis were not certain whether Hitler would be appointed chancellor or Hindenburg would ask him to serve as vice-chancellor.

Across the street from the Chancellery, in the Kaiserhof Hotel, Hitler's lieutenants were waiting, unsure of what was going on. Goebbels, the Nazi propaganda chief, said:

In the street the crowd stands waiting between the Kaiserhof and the Chancellery. We are torn between doubt, hope, joy and despair. We have been deceived too often to be able, wholeheartedly, to believe in the great miracle. [S.A.] Chief of Staff Roehm stands at the window (with binoculars) watching the door of the Chancellery from which the Fuehrer [the leader, Hitler] must emerge. We shall be able to judge by his face if the interview was a success. Torturing hours of waiting.
At last, a car draws up in front of the entrance. The crowd cheers. They seem to feel that a great change is taking place....
A few moments later, he is with us. He says nothing. His eyes are full of tears. It has come! The Fuehrer is appointed Chancellor. He has already been sworn in by the President of the Reich. All of us are dumb with emotion. Everyone clasps the Fuehrer's hand....Outside the Kaiserhof, the masses are in a wild uproar....The thousands soon become tens of thousands. Endless streams of people flood the Wilhelmstrasse. We set to work...at once.
Hitler's victory was not a complete one by any means. He had been appointed chancellor in a coalition government. Papen was to be his vice-chancellor, and all the powerful cabinet posts were held by Papen's conservative allies, rather than the Nazis. But at the moment, Hitler's followers weren't worried about the details; for them the only thing that mattered was that Hitler was chancellor. They had come to power! All day, crowds gathered in the square outside the Kaiserhof Hotel and the Chancellery.
At dusk Nazi storm troopers in their brown uniforms gathered in the Tiergarten park, along with men of the Stahlhelm, an ultranationalistic veterans' organization, for a torchlight victory parade through the center of Berlin. As soon as it was dark, they came marching by the thousands through the Brandenburg Gate, carrying swastika flags and the black, white, and red flags of the German empire. Bands marched between the units, beating their big drums as the men sang old German military songs. But as each band came to the Pariser Platz, where the French embassy was located, they stopped whatever they were playing and, with an introductory roll of drums, broke into the tune of the challenging war song "Victorious We Will Crush the French."
The torches carried by the marchers glowed hypnotically in the darkness. To foreign witnesses, it was a frightening sight. "The river of fire flowed past the French Embassy," Ambassador François-Poncet wrote, "whence, with heavy heart and filled with foreboding, I watched this luminous wake." Liberal Germans found it an "ominous sight." It was, wrote one German reporter, "a night of deadly menace, a nightmare in...blazing torches."
As the marchers came by the Chancellery, there were tumultuous cheers for Hitler, who stood in an open window saluting them. He was so excited that night, he could hardly stand still. He was raising his arm up and down heiling, smiling, and laughing so much, his eyes filled with tears. "It was an extraordinary experience," recalled Papen, who was standing behind Hitler. "The endless repetition of the triumphal cry: 'Heil, Heil, Sieg Heil!' rang in my ears like a tocsin." When Hitler turned to speak with Papen, his voice choked with emotion. "What an immense task we have set for ourselves, Herr von Papen - we must never part until our work is accomplished." Hitler and Papen were much closer allies than anyone at the time imagined.

It was after midnight when the parade ended. Being too excited to sleep, Hitler, Goering, Goebbels, and a few other Nazis sat up talking for hours. They could hardly believe it had actually happened: they were in the Chancellery at last. That evening, Hitler said to Goebbels, "No one gets me out of here alive." It was one of the few promises he kept.

On the morning of January 31, Hitler's storm troopers gave the German people a glimpse of what Nazi rule would be like. All over Germany, thugs in brown shirts took possession of the streets and roughed up Communists, socialists, and Jews; they chased socialist mayors and officials out of government buildings and even broke into the private homes of their political enemies. When people complained to Papen, he laughed. "Let the storm troopers have their fling." Among his friends at the Herrenklub, an exclusive gentlemens club, he boasted: "We've hired Hitler." To a skeptic he replied: "What do you want? I have Hindenburg's confidence. Within two months we will have pushed Hitler so far in the corner that he'll squeak."

The facts seemed to support Papen's optimism. Not only did Papen have Hindenburg"s confidence, but in fact the old president had promised never to receive Hitler unless he was accompanied by his vice-chancellor. Papen also held the important post of minister-president of Prussia, Germany's largest and most powerful state. From the composition of the cabinet, it seemed all the real power was in the hands of the conservatives: the aristocratic General von Blomberg was minister of defense, Baron von Neurath, a career diplomat, was foreign minister, and the old archreactionary Hugenberg was both minister of economics and minister of agriculture. The Nazis were outnumbered six to two.

The two Nazis in the cabinet, Wilhelm Frick and Goering, held posts that were thought to be insignificant. Frick was minister of the interior, but he did not control the police, which in Germany was under the jurisdiction of the individual state governments. Goering was made minister without portfolio, but with the promise that he would be minister of aviation as soon as Germany had an air force. He was also named minister of the interior of Prussia, an office that did not receive much notice by the public but did control the Prussian police.

The aristocrats and gentlemen of the Right who made up the majority of Hitler's cabinet hated the concept of democracy even more than the Nazis did. These men belonged to the old ruling class of the kaiser's

Germany. They wanted to regain their old position of supremacy, lost in 1918. They wanted to restore the monarchy, suppress the socialist unions, avenge the loss of World War I, and make Germany the dominant power in Europe. It was obvious why such reactionary nationalists helped put Hitler in power: their goals and his were very similar.
Few people knew the full extent of Papen's collaboration with Hitler. Historians have said he "did more than anyone else outside the Nazi party to help Hitler to power." Papen helped Hitler because he was trying to control him and use the Nazis for his own aims.
Papen was a handsome aristocratic-looking man with distinguished gray hair and an officer's mustache. From an impoverished family of the Westphalian nobility, he became a General Staff officer, a skillful horseman, and a man of great charm. After a successful marriage to the daughter of a wealthy Saar industrialist, he bought a large block of shares in the Center party's newspaper, Germania. For a short time in 1932, Papen was chancellor, but his government had no popular support.
Papen believed it would be rather easy for an aristocratic officer like himself to manipulate a former corporal, like Hitler, and thus be able to use the Nazi's mass following to accomplish the aims of the upper-class conservative nationalists.
Hitler immediately began to outmaneuver his conservative colleagues. He reported to the cabinet that the Center party was making impossible demands and could not be counted on to form a coalition with the Nazis and the Nationalists that would have a majority in the Reichstag. Because of this situation, Hitler argued he would have to call for new elections. The only "demand" the Center party made was that Hitler promise to govern constitutionally, but none of the other members of the cabinet bothered to check Hitler's statement. They agreed to new elections on the condition that Hitler promise that the composition of the cabinet would not change regardless of the outcome of the voting.
New elections would provide Hitler with a chance to improve on the poor results the Nazis had received at the polls the past November. If the Nazis won a clear majority in the elections, they might be able to get rid of their coalition partners. Hitler had every reason to believe the election campaign would be a big success. The entire machinery of government, including the radio, was now under Nazi control and could be used for campaigning. The party had been flooded with new applicants for membership since he had become chancellor. In the cabinet meeting on February 2, Hitler discussed his preparations for the elections. Wilhelm Frick, the Nazi minister of the interior, proposed that the government set aside a million marks for the election campaign. Count von Schwerin von Krosigk, the minister of finance, rejected this suggestion. Hitler did not force the issue. He would have to get the money elsewhere.
The theme of the Nazi election campaign was to be the fight against communism. Hitler opened the attack in a late-night radio broadcast to the nation on February 1. He blamed the hard times Germany had gone through since 1918 on the Social Democrats, which had been the largest party in the Reichstag during most of those years. The Social Democrats, he reminded his listeners, were actually a Marxist party. "Fourteen years of Marxism," he said, "have ruined Germany; one year of bolshevism [communism] would destroy her. The richest and fairest territories of the world would be turned into a smoking heap of ruins. Even the sufferings of the last decade and a half could not be compared to the misery of a Europe in the heart of which the red flag of destruction has been hoisted." He went on to promise to put the unemployed back to work and save the peasants from bankruptcy.

On his fourth day in office, just after opening the election campaign, Hitler took time off to attend a very important dinner. He had been invited to the home of General von Hammerstein, chief of staff of the army, to meet the leading officers of the army and navy. In a speech that lasted almost two hours, Hitler explained his plans for rebuilding German military power.
The generals were the real power in Germany during the Weimar period. After World War II, many Germans tried to cover up the role certain members of the Officer Corps had played in helping to put Hitler in power. Many historians naively accepted this view, but the real story is quite different. Traditionally, the German Army ruled from behind the scenes and had the final "power to veto" any important issue. After the loss of World War I, the Versailles Treaty severely restricted the size of the German Army. The only way the generals could maintain mass training and develop new weapons was to finance private paramilitary units, like the Free Corps, with secret army funds.
Hitler not only began his career as an army agent, but even in the 1930s he was supported by a powerful faction in the army. Over several years, General von Schleicher, who was in charge of a secret informal political department of the army, funneled over ten million marks to Hitler. Why? Many military officers wanted an authoritarian government that could unify the nation. The people needed to be infused with a new spirit of patriotism because powerful interests were planning a war of revenge against the Allies. Naturally there was a division of opinion among the generals as to how much power to give Hitler. Hindenburg originally had strong reservations about appointing a man from a lower-class background, like Hitler, chancellor. However, the aggressive action the Nazis took against Communists was admired by Hindenburg, and his relationship with Hitler rapidly improved.
One day, Hindenburg summoned Hitler when Papen was away from Berlin. Hitler informed the president that Papen was out of town and reminded him of the rule he (Hindenburg) had made, that the chancellor could visit him only when accompanied by the vice-chancellor. "The old gentleman [Hindenburg]," said Hitler, "replied that he wished to see me alone, and that in the future the presence of Papen could be regarded as unnecessary. Within three weeks, he had progressed so far that his attitude towards me became affectionate and paternal. Talking of the elections fixed for the 3rd of March, he said, 'What are we going to do if you fail to get a majority? We shall have the same difficulties all over again.'"

At the beginning of the election campaign, Hitler and Papen persuaded old President von Hindenburg to sign an emergency decree to protect law and order. The decree gave Nazi officials the right to prohibit public meetings. Newspapers could be suppressed if they "incited" civil disobedience or published "false" reports.

Chapter 1: Financing the 1933 Elections
On the cold winter weekend of January 28, 1933, Germany was officially without a government. Chancellor Kurt von Schleicher and his cabinet had resigned on Saturday afternoon, and eighty-six-year-old President von Hindenburg had not yet appointed a new chancellor. A nervous tension spread over Berlin. Everyone waited for news; most felt Germany was at an historic turning point.
Who would be the next chancellor? Hitler - the leader of the largest party, the Nazis, who pledged to destroy democracy? Papen - the aristocratic horseman who had been chancellor before Schleicher, but who had no popular following? Perhaps Schleicher again, if he could persuade the Social Democrats, the second largest political party in the country, to join him in a coalition? Governing Germany in the middle of an economic depression with nine million unemployed was not an enviable task. The country had just had three different chancellors in rapid succession. By tradition, the leader of the largest party was usually appointed chancellor. But the Nazis had been the largest party for over a year, and so far intrigues and political maneuvering had succeeded in keeping Hitler out of power. Everyone guessed what a Hitler government would mean. He had not kept his militarism, anti-Semitism, and dictatorial ambitions a secret.
Political intrigues were so numerous that weekend that no one really knew what was going on. Sensational rumors were being spread throughout the city. Some said an army coup was imminent, that Schleicher and the generals were about to abduct President von Hindenburg and declare martial law. There were also rumors of an armed Nazi uprising and a general strike by the socialist workers.
Hitler and Hermann Goering, the second most powerful man in the Nazi party, stayed up all night on Sunday, January 29, trying to figure out what Hindenburg might do. It was not until after 10 A.M. on Monday that Hitler received a summons to the president's office. Even at that point, the Nazis were not certain whether Hitler would be appointed chancellor or Hindenburg would ask him to serve as vice-chancellor. Across the street from the Chancellery, in the Kaiserhof Hotel, Hitler's lieutenants were waiting, unsure of what was going on. Goebbels, the Nazi propaganda chief, said:

In the street the crowd stands waiting between the Kaiserhof and the Chancellery. We are torn between doubt, hope, joy and despair. We have been deceived too often to be able, wholeheartedly, to believe in the great miracle. [S.A.] Chief of Staff Roehm stands at the window (with binoculars) watching the door of the Chancellery from which the Fuehrer [the leader, Hitler] must emerge. We shall be able to judge by his face if the interview was a success. Torturing hours of waiting. At last, a car draws up in front of the entrance. The crowd cheers. They seem to feel that a great change is taking place....
A few moments later, he is with us. He says nothing. His eyes are full of tears. It has come! The Fuehrer is appointed Chancellor. He has already been sworn in by the President of the Reich. All of us are dumb with emotion. Everyone clasps the Fuehrer's hand....Outside the Kaiserhof, the masses are in a wild uproar....The thousands soon become tens of thousands. Endless streams of people flood the Wilhelmstrasse. We set to work...at once.
Hitler's victory was not a complete one by any means. He had been appointed chancellor in a coalition government. Papen was to be his vice-chancellor, and all the powerful cabinet posts were held by Papen's conservative allies, rather than the Nazis. But at the moment, Hitler's followers weren't worried about the details; for them the only thing that mattered was that Hitler was chancellor. They had come to power! All day, crowds gathered in the square outside the Kaiserhof Hotel and the Chancellery.
At dusk Nazi storm troopers in their brown uniforms gathered in the Tiergarten park, along with men of the Stahlhelm, an ultranationalistic veterans' organization, for a torchlight victory parade through the center of Berlin. As soon as it was dark, they came marching by the thousands through the Brandenburg Gate, carrying swastika flags and the black, white, and red flags of the German empire. Bands marched between the units, beating their big drums as the men sang old German military songs. But as each band came to the Pariser Platz, where the French embassy was located, they stopped whatever they were playing and, with an introductory roll of drums, broke into the tune of the challenging war song "Victorious We Will Crush the French."
The torches carried by the marchers glowed hypnotically in the darkness. To foreign witnesses, it was a frightening sight. "The river of fire flowed past the French Embassy," Ambassador François-Poncet wrote, "whence, with heavy heart and filled with foreboding, I watched this luminous wake." Liberal Germans found it an "ominous sight." It was, wrote one German reporter, "a night of deadly menace, a nightmare in...blazing torches."
As the marchers came by the Chancellery, there were tumultuous cheers for Hitler, who stood in an open window saluting them. He was so excited that night, he could hardly stand still. He was raising his arm up and down heiling, smiling, and laughing so much, his eyes filled with tears. "It was an extraordinary experience," recalled Papen, who was standing behind Hitler. "The endless repetition of the triumphal cry: 'Heil, Heil, Sieg Heil!' rang in my ears like a tocsin." When Hitler turned to speak with Papen, his voice choked with emotion. "What an immense task we have set for ourselves, Herr von Papen - we must never part until our work is accomplished." Hitler and Papen were much closer allies than anyone at the time imagined.

It was after midnight when the parade ended. Being too excited to sleep, Hitler, Goering, Goebbels, and a few other Nazis sat up talking for hours. They could hardly believe it had actually happened: they were in the Chancellery at last. That evening, Hitler said to Goebbels, "No one gets me out of here alive." It was one of the few promises he kept.
On the morning of January 31, Hitler's storm troopers gave the German people a glimpse of what Nazi rule would be like. All over Germany, thugs in brown shirts took possession of the streets and roughed up Communists, socialists, and Jews; they chased socialist mayors and officials out of government buildings and even broke into the private homes of their political enemies. When people complained to Papen, he laughed. "Let the storm troopers have their fling." Among his friends at the Herrenklub, an exclusive gentlemens club, he boasted: "We've hired Hitler." To a skeptic he replied: "What do you want? I have Hindenburg's confidence. Within two months we will have pushed Hitler so far in the corner that he'll squeak."
The facts seemed to support Papen's optimism. Not only did Papen have Hindenburg"s confidence, but in fact the old president had promised never to receive Hitler unless he was accompanied by his vice-chancellor. Papen also held the important post of minister-president of Prussia, Germany's largest and most powerful state. From the composition of the cabinet, it seemed all the real power was in the hands of the conservatives: the aristocratic General von Blomberg was minister of defense, Baron von Neurath, a career diplomat, was foreign minister, and the old archreactionary Hugenberg was both minister of economics and minister of agriculture. The Nazis were outnumbered six to two.
The two Nazis in the cabinet, Wilhelm Frick and Goering, held posts that were thought to be insignificant. Frick was minister of the interior, but he did not control the police, which in Germany was under the jurisdiction of the individual state governments. Goering was made minister without portfolio, but with the promise that he would be minister of aviation as soon as Germany had an air force. He was also named minister of the interior of Prussia, an office that did not receive much notice by the public but did control the Prussian police.
The aristocrats and gentlemen of the Right who made up the majority of Hitler's cabinet hated the concept of democracy even more than the Nazis did. These men belonged to the old ruling class of the kaiser's Germany. They wanted to regain their old position of supremacy, lost in 1918. They wanted to restore the monarchy, suppress the socialist unions, avenge the loss of World War I, and make Germany the dominant power in Europe. It was obvious why such reactionary nationalists helped put Hitler in power: their goals and his were very similar.

Few people knew the full extent of Papen's collaboration with Hitler. Historians have said he "did more than anyone else outside the Nazi party to help Hitler to power." Papen helped Hitler because he was trying to control him and use the Nazis for his own aims.
Papen was a handsome aristocratic-looking man with distinguished gray hair and an officer's mustache. From an impoverished family of the Westphalian nobility, he became a General Staff officer, a skillful horseman, and a man of great charm. After a successful marriage to the daughter of a wealthy Saar industrialist, he bought a large block of shares in the Center party's newspaper, Germania. For a short time in 1932, Papen was chancellor, but his government had no popular support.
Papen believed it would be rather easy for an aristocratic officer like himself to manipulate a former corporal, like Hitler, and thus be able to use the Nazi's mass following to accomplish the aims of the upper-class conservative nationalists.
Hitler immediately began to outmaneuver his conservative colleagues. He reported to the cabinet that the Center party was making impossible demands and could not be counted on to form a coalition with the Nazis and the Nationalists that would have a majority in the Reichstag. Because of this situation, Hitler argued he would have to call for new elections. The only "demand" the Center party made was that Hitler promise to govern constitutionally, but none of the other members of the cabinet bothered to check Hitler's statement. They agreed to new elections on the condition that Hitler promise that the composition of the cabinet would not change regardless of the outcome of the voting.
New elections would provide Hitler with a chance to improve on the poor results the Nazis had received at the polls the past November. If the Nazis won a clear majority in the elections, they might be able to get rid of their coalition partners. Hitler had every reason to believe the election campaign would be a big success. The entire machinery of government, including the radio, was now under Nazi control and could be used for campaigning. The party had been flooded with new applicants for membership since he had become chancellor. In the cabinet meeting on February 2, Hitler discussed his preparations for the elections. Wilhelm Frick, the Nazi minister of the interior, proposed that the government set aside a million marks for the election campaign. Count von Schwerin von Krosigk, the minister of finance, rejected this suggestion. Hitler did not force the issue. He would have to get the money elsewhere.
The theme of the Nazi election campaign was to be the fight against communism. Hitler opened the attack in a late-night radio broadcast to the nation on February 1. He blamed the hard times Germany had gone through since 1918 on the Social Democrats, which had been the largest party in the Reichstag during most of those years. The Social Democrats, he reminded his listeners, were actually a Marxist party. "Fourteen years of Marxism," he said, "have ruined Germany; one year of bolshevism [communism] would destroy her. The richest and fairest territories of the world would be turned into a smoking heap of ruins. Even the sufferings of the last decade and a half could not be compared to the misery of a Europe in the heart of which the red flag of destruction has been hoisted." He went on to promise to put the unemployed back to work and save the peasants from bankruptcy.

On his fourth day in office, just after opening the election campaign, Hitler took time off to attend a very important dinner. He had been invited to the home of General von Hammerstein, chief of staff of the army, to meet the leading officers of the army and navy. In a speech that lasted almost two hours, Hitler explained his plans for rebuilding German military power.
The generals were the real power in Germany during the Weimar period. After World War II, many Germans tried to cover up the role certain members of the Officer Corps had played in helping to put Hitler in power. Many historians naively accepted this view, but the real story is quite different. Traditionally, the German Army ruled from behind the scenes and had the final "power to veto" any important issue. After the loss of World War I, the Versailles Treaty severely restricted the size of the German Army. The only way the generals could maintain mass training and develop new weapons was to finance private paramilitary units, like the Free Corps, with secret army funds.
Hitler not only began his career as an army agent, but even in the 1930s he was supported by a powerful faction in the army. Over several years, General von Schleicher, who was in charge of a secret informal political department of the army, funneled over ten million marks to Hitler. Why? Many military officers wanted an authoritarian government that could unify the nation. The people needed to be infused with a new spirit of patriotism because powerful interests were planning a war of revenge against the Allies. Naturally there was a division of opinion among the generals as to how much power to give Hitler. Hindenburg originally had strong reservations about appointing a man from a lower-class background, like Hitler, chancellor. However, the aggressive action the Nazis took against Communists was admired by Hindenburg, and his relationship with Hitler rapidly improved.
One day, Hindenburg summoned Hitler when Papen was away from Berlin. Hitler informed the president that Papen was out of town and reminded him of the rule he (Hindenburg) had made, that the chancellor could visit him only when accompanied by the vice-chancellor. "The old gentleman [Hindenburg]," said Hitler, "replied that he wished to see me alone, and that in the future the presence of Papen could be regarded as unnecessary. Within three weeks, he had progressed so far that his attitude towards me became affectionate and paternal. Talking of the elections fixed for the 3rd of March, he said, 'What are we going to do if you fail to get a majority? We shall have the same difficulties all over again.'"

Interesting People ADOLPH HITLER
If there is one person in history whose activities changed the world the most, that person is Adolf Hitler. Hitler (1889-1945) was the German dictator who founded the National Socialism (Nazi) movement in 1920. Within twonty years, Hitler had led Germany and its allies into World War II (1939-1945), by any measure, the most devastating war in history, with over 60 million people killed.
As a young man, Hitler served in the Bavarian army during World War I. (Bavaria is a part of Germany.) Although he was recognized for bravery, the experience embittered him, and he blamed Germany's defeat on Jews and Marxists.
In 1921, Hitler became the leader of the German National Socialist (Nazi) Party. In 1923, he unsuccessfully attempted to overthrow the Bavarian government — the so-called Beer Hall Putsch — and was imprisoned for nine months. During that time, Hitler wrote the book Mein Kampf ("My Struggle"), in which he laid bare his theories of hate and anti-Semitism, and his plans for world domination, a vision in which the German master race would create the so-called Third Reich. ("Germany will either become a World Power or will not continue to exist at all." — Vol. 2, Ch. XIV)
In time, Mein Kampf would become the bible of the Nazi party. The grew slowly, however, until the Great Depression, during which Hitler's skills as a speaker and organizer allowed him to capitalize on the growing social and economic unrest. As a master of the "big lie", he was able to build substantial grass-roots support, based on a platform of anti-Semitism and anti-communism.
Although he had some false starts, Hitler became Chancellor of Germany in 1933 and, within a year, was given full dictatorial powers by the government. In concert with other Nazi leaders — principally Goering, Himmler and Goebbels — Hitler crushed all opposition and took control of most facets of German life. In 1934, laws were passed to establish official anti-Semitism and to create the first concentration camps.
On August 2, 1934, the elderly president of Germany died. Within hours, Hitler declared himself Fuhrer (supreme ruler) of Germany.

Technically, the declaration was illegal. However, less than three weeks later, a special election was held in which 90 percent of the German people voted to confirm Hitler as Fuhrer. Hitler was now the absolute ruler of Germany, a law unto himself.

Over the next few years, Hitler prepared Germany for war, carrying out many political maneuvers that allowed him to extend his power into smaller, less powerful countries. On September 1, 1939, Germany invaded Poland. Two days later, Britain, France, Australia and New Zealand (the Allies) declared war on Germany, formally starting World War II.

At first, Germany had a great deal of military success, invading and conquering much of Europe, North Africa and Russia. On December 11, 1941, Germany declared war on the United States, upon which the U.S. entered the war on the side of the Allies. Still, it was some time before the Germans would be stopped. Indeed, on April 26, 1942, Hitler declared, "This war no longer bears the characteristics of former inter-European conflicts. It is one of those elemental conflicts which usher in a new millennium and which shake the world once in a thousand years."

In the fullness of time, Hitler was proved to be wrong. On February 2, 1943, he received his first major setback when the Germans were defeated at Stalingrad in southwest Russia. Over the next two years, the Allies began to defeat Germany, one battle at a time and, by the spring of 1945, virtually all of Europe and North Africa had been liberated.

With the Third Reich collapsing around him and the Russians approaching, Hitler hid in an underground bunker in Berlin. On April 29, 1945, as the Russians approached the city, Hitler married his longtime mistress Eva Braun. The next day, both Hitler and Braun committed suicide.
